A GUIDE TO OBTAINING RELEASE FROM IMMIGRATION DETENTION

May 28, 2024

Publication of the National Immigration Project (NIPNLG), 2024. This practice advisory is released under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License (CC BY 4.0). The advisory is intended for authorized legal counsel and is not a substitute for independent legal advice provided by legal counsel familiar with a client's case. Counsel should independently confirm whether the law has changed since the date of this publication.

This guide was updated in 2024 by Yulie Landan, NIPNLG Justice Catalyst fellow, Amber Qureshi, NIPNLG Staff Attorney, and Rebecca Scholtz, NIPNLG Senior Staff Attorney. The original version of this guide, published in 2018 by the Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc. (CLINIC), was written by Rebecca Scholtz and Michelle N. Méndez; Tanika Vigil led the 2021 revisions to this guide.

The authors would like to thank the following individuals for their invaluable contributions to the original 2018 guide (titles and affiliations listed are from 2018): Linus Chan, Director of the Detainee Rights Clinic, James H. Binger Center for New Americans, University of Minnesota Law School; Bradley Jenkins, BIA Pro Bono Project Manager, CLINIC; Stephen Kang, Detention Attorney, ACLU Immigrants' Rights Project; Hon. Eliza C. Klein (Ret. U.S. Immigration Judge); Katherine M. Lewis, senior associate attorney at Van Der Hout, Brigagliano & Nightingale, LLP; Laura Lunn, Detention Program Managing Attorney, Rocky Mountain Immigrant Advocacy Network; Stephen Manning, Legal Director, Innovation Law Lab; Kathleen Moccio, Visiting Assistant Clinical Professor, Detainee Rights Clinic, James H. Binger Center for New Americans, University of Minnesota Law School; Rachel Naggar, Remote Bond Project Attorney, CLINIC; Andrea Saenz, Supervising Attorney, Immigration Practice, Brooklyn Defender Services; Maureen A. Sweeney, Law School Associate Professor, Immigration Clinic, University of Maryland Carey School of Law; Michael Tan, Staff Attorney, ACLU Immigrants' Rights Project; and Claudia Valenzuela, Detention Project Director, National Immigrant Justice Center.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. Introduction....5
II. Overview of Immigration Detention....6
A. When Detention Is Most Likely to Occur....6
B. What Happens When an Individual Is Taken into Immigration Detention?....6
C. Transfer of Detained Individuals....7
D. Demographics of Those in Immigration Detention....8
E. Immigration Detention Conditions....9
III. Overview of Legal Bases for Immigration Detention and Strategies for Securing Release....11
A. Discretionary Detention Under INA § 236(a)....11
1. Negotiating Release with ERO....12
2. Note on Release Policies Under the Biden Administration....14
3. Habeas Petitions in Federal Court....15
B. Mandatory Detention Under INA § 236(c)....16
1. Joseph Hearings....17
2. Habeas Petitions in Federal Court....20
3. Note on Respondents with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions....21
C. Detention Under INA § 235(b) of "Arriving" Noncitizens and Other Individuals in the Credible Fear Process....22
1. Detention of Arriving Noncitizens....22
2. Detention of Asylum Seekers Subjected to Expedited Removal Proceedings....23
3. Parole Requests....25
4. Habeas Petitions....26
D. Detention Under INA § 241 for Individuals with Administratively Final Orders of Removal....28
1. Detention Classification for Individuals with Pending Petitions for Review....28
2. Detention Authority for Individuals with Final Removal Orders Who Are Detained During the "Removal Period"....29
3. Post-Order Custody Reviews of Individuals Who Are Detained Beyond the "Removal Period"....29
4. Release of Individuals with Final Orders of Removal and a Grant of Withholding or Deferral of Removal....31
5. Habeas Petitions....32
E. Other Restrictions on Freedom – Alternatives to Detention and Orders of Supervision....33
1. Orders of Supervision....35

F. Chart: Immigration Detention and Remedies to Seek Release 36
IV. Legal Framework and Procedural Rules in Immigration Court Bond Hearings 37
A. Authority to Set Bond 37
B. How to Request a Bond Hearing 38
C. Where to File a Bond Hearing Request 38
D. When a Bond Hearing Request Can Be Made 39
E. Representation During Bond Hearings 39
F. Bond Record and Evidence 40
G. Bond Amounts and Ability to Pay 41
H. Burden of Proof During Bond Hearings 43
I. Legal Standard Governing Bond Hearings 44
1. Dangerousness and DUIs 45
2. Flight Risk 46
V. Nuts and Bolts of Bond Proceedings 48
A. Bond Hearing Preparation 49
1. Working with Detained Clients 50
Locating a Detained Client 50
Communicating with a Detained Client 51
In-Person Visits 51
2. Records Gathering and Fact Development 53
Obtaining Existing Records 54
Developing New Evidence Supporting Release on Bond 56
Practice Tip on Developing an Effective Declaration 57
3. Submitting Documents in Advance of the Bond Hearing 58
Preparing and Filing a Motion for a Bond Redetermination 58
Preparing and Filing Supplemental Documents in Support of Bond 60
4. Hearing Preparation 61
General Preparation 61
Approaching the DHS Attorney 61
Requesting Testimony 62
Preparing the Client for Testimony 62
Preparing the Client for Direct Examination 63
Preparing the Client for Cross Examination and Questions by the IJ 64
Preparing the Client for Testimony Using an Interpreter 64

Preparing Other Witnesses for Testimony 65
Preparing for Cross of DHS Witnesses 66
5. Mitigating Harmful Evidence, Facts, or Allegations Suggesting Dangerousness 66
Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where the Respondent Has Criminal Conviction(s) 66
Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where There Are Pending Criminal Charges Against the Respondent 69
Showing Lack of Dangerousness When DHS Introduces Harmful Allegations, in the Absence of Any Pending Charges or Criminal Convictions 73
Objections Based on Hearsay 76
Note on Smuggling Allegations 80
B. Bond Hearing Practice Tips 80
C. Post Bond Hearing Considerations 83
1. Paying the Bond 83
2. Result of Release on Bond 84
3. Getting Bond Money Back at the Conclusion of the Removal Case 85
4. Voluntary Departure in Detention 86
5. Bond Revocation 87
6. Second or Successive Requests for Bond Redetermination 87
VI. Bond Appeals 88
A. Legal Overview of Bond Appeals 88
1. Bond Appeals Generally 88
2. Stays of an IJ's Bond Decision While a BIA Appeal Is Pending 89
B. Nuts and Bolts of the Bond Appeal Process 91
1. Initial Considerations Prior to Filing the Appeal 91
2. Filing the Bond Appeal 91
3. Appeal Brief, Processing, and Decision 93
VII. Conclusion 95

I. Introduction

Individuals in immigration court removal proceedings—referred to as respondents[1]—face high stakes and substantial hurdles in obtaining relief due to the complexity of immigration law and the fact that many of them undergo the process unrepresented.[2] These hurdles are compounded for those detained during removal proceedings. Because detained cases are a scheduling priority in immigration court, they are placed on a fast track, which gives respondents less time to find representation and prepare their cases. But apart from the time pressure, those in immigration detention also face hurdles in preparing their cases given the difficulties in communicating with the outside world, accessing legal materials, and securing legal representation. For all of these reasons, an individual's ability to fight their case improves significantly if they obtain release from detention.

The aim of this guide is to provide practitioners with a comprehensive resource for representing adult clients detained by DHS in immigration court bond proceedings.[3] Section II of this guide provides an overview of immigration detention, including the various statutory bases for detention and corresponding strategies for seeking release. Section III gives a legal overview of bond procedures in immigration court. Section IV discusses the nuts and bolts of preparing for and representing a client during a bond hearing. Section V discusses appeals of immigration court bond decisions to the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA).

---

[1] See Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), Immigration Court Practice Manual Ch. 4.3, https://www.justice.gov/eoir/reference-materials/ic [hereinafter "Immigration Court Practice Manual"]. In general, this guide uses the terms "individual," "client," "respondent," or, less frequently, "noncitizen." This guide uses "noncitizen" less frequently because some individuals apprehended or detained by the Department of Homeland Security are U.S. citizens or have a U.S. citizenship claim.

[2] See, e.g., EOIR, Adjudication Statistics: Current Representation Rates (Jan. 18, 2024), https://www.justice.gov/eoir/media/1344931/dl?inline (showing overall representation rate in pending cases of 36 percent).

[3] This guide focuses on bond hearings for adults who are detained by DHS. It does not cover bond hearings in children's cases. See, e.g., Flores v. Sessions, 862 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2017) (recognized the right to bond hearings for unaccompanied children in the custody of the Office of Refugee Resettlement). This guide also does not cover voluntary departure bonds, which are bonds an IJ may require an individual to post as a condition of the voluntary departure grant.

II. Overview of Immigration Detention

A. When Detention Is Most Likely to Occur

Individuals are detained by DHS in a variety of circumstances. Some are detained soon after crossing the border without inspection, or after presenting themselves at a port of entry seeking asylum. Many are detained after contact with the criminal legal system. For example, an individual might be arrested for a traffic offense, booked into jail, and upon release from state or local custody transferred into Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) custody.[4] Other individuals end up in immigration detention as a result of ICE enforcement actions, such as home or workplace arrests.

B. What Happens When an Individual Is Taken into Immigration Detention?

When DHS apprehends an individual, it typically takes them to a DHS facility, usually an ICE Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) field office or sub-office, for processing.[5] During processing, officers interview, fingerprint, and photograph the individual, and make a custody determination using ICE's Risk Classification Assessment (RCA) tool, based on factors such as criminal history, prior removal data, visa violations, community ties, and alleged gang affiliation.[6] DHS may decide to detain the individual or may decide to release the individual through one of several release options, including bond, release on recognizance, or parole.[7] If DHS decides to detain the individual, the individual may be detained at a facility relatively close to their home or DHS may transfer the individual to a detention center anywhere in the country.

---

[4] See, e.g., INA § 287(g); ICE, Delegation of Immigration Authority Section 287(g) Immigration and Nationality Act (last updated Feb. 29, 2024), https://www.ice.gov/identify-and-arrest/287g.

[5] Processing may also take place at other locations, such as the state criminal detention facility where the individual is incarcerated for those placed in the "institutional removal program." See, e.g., Memorandum from John P. Torres, Acting Dir., Office of Detention & Removal Operations, Detention and Deportation Officer's Field Manual Update: Chapter 1, at 26 (Mar. 27, 2006), www.ice.gov/doclib/foia/dro_policy_memos/09684drofieldpolicymanual.pdf.

[6] See U.S. Gov't Accountability Office (GAO), Report to Congressional Committees: Alternatives to Detention, Improved Data Collection and Analyses Needed to Better Assess Program Effectiveness, at 8 (Nov. 2014), www.gao.gov/assets/670/666911.pdf (describing the ICE Risk Classification Assessment tool).

[7] The RCA can make several recommendations based on the inputted data, including release on community supervision; detain but eligible for bond; detain; and supervisor to determine. As of 2017, the RCA tool was programmed to no longer recommend release on community supervision, and as such, will always recommend detention. See Declaration of David Hausman, Velasaca v. Decker, No. 1:20-cv-01803-AKH, Dkt. 12 (Feb. 28, 2020), https://www.nyclu.org/sites/default/files/field_documents/declaration.pdf.

C. Transfer of Detained Individuals

ICE may transfer an individual multiple times and without advance warning.[8] ICE's transfer policy describes transfer criteria and requirements including that detained individuals should generally not be transferred if they have immediate family, an attorney of record, or pending removal proceedings in the jurisdiction, or have been granted bond or scheduled for a bond hearing.[9] Some practitioners have reported, however, that ICE does not comply with the policy and several federal lawsuits have been brought challenging these practices.[10] Special transfer rules also apply to those protected by the Orantes injunction, which covers Salvadorans detained by DHS who are eligible to apply for asylum.[11] ICE's decision to transfer a client can make legal representation much more challenging, particularly where ICE moves the client far away from the representative or the client's family and friends, who might otherwise be able to assist with the case.

ICE also determines the initial venue for removal proceedings based on where it files the Notice to Appear (NTA).[12] If ICE transfers an individual while removal proceedings are pending, ICE must notify the immigration court at which point the ICE Office of the Principal Legal Advisor (OPLA) attorney representing DHS in the individual's removal proceedings may seek to change venue by [8] DHS is to inform the detained individual "immediately prior to transfer" and to provide notice within 24 hours of the transfer to an individual's representative, if any. ICE, Policy 11022.1: Detainee Transfers § 5.3 (Jan. 4, 2012), www.ice.gov/doclib/detention-reform/pdf/hd-detainee-transfers.pdf (directing that ICE inform the representative of the transfer "as soon as practicable on the day of the transfer, but in no circumstances later than twenty four (24) hours after the transfer occurs") [hereinafter "ICE Transfer Policy"].

---

[9] See id. § 5.2(3) (noting exceptions including transfers for medical or mental health reasons, based on detainee request, "[f]or the safety and security of the detainee, other detainees, detention personnel or any ICE employee," for the agency's convenience when the venue of detention is different than the immigration court venue, due to termination of facility use, to prevent overcrowding, and "[t]o transfer to a more appropriate detention facility based on the detainee's individual circumstances and risk factors"). The ICE National Detainee Handbook provides that a detained individual may request transfer to another facility if the current detention facility does not have outdoor recreation opportunities. ICE ERO, National Detainee Handbook, at 16 (2023), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/detention/ndHandbook/ndhEnglish.pdf.

[10] See, e.g., Reyna v. Hott, 921 F.3d 204 (4th Cir. 2019) (denying suit challenging plaintiffs' transfer to facility far from their children based on conclusion that no constitutional right to family unity existed in the context of immigration detention); Arroyo v. DHS, No. 8:19-cv-0815, 2019 WL 2912848 (C.D. Cal. June 20, 2019) (granting preliminary injunction prohibiting ICE transfer of certain individuals to facilities outside the ICE Los Angeles field office area of responsibility).

[11] Orantes-Hernandez v. Meese, 685 F. Supp. 1488, 1491 (C.D. Cal. 1988), aff'd., 919 F.2d 549 (9th Cir. 1990), created a nationwide permanent injunction upholding the rights of Salvadorans detained by DHS who are eligible to apply for asylum. The injunction orders DHS to comply with a number of requirements, including permitting access to counsel, placing limits on the transfer of unrepresented individuals in immigration detention, and providing access to legal materials. If a practitioner believes an Orantes violation has occurred, they can contact class counsel, the National Immigration Law Center (NILC). See NILC, The Orantes Injunction (May 2022), www.nilc.org/issues/immigrationenforcement/orantesinjunction/.

[12] See 8 CFR § 1239.1(a).

filing a change of venue motion.[13] If ICE transfers a respondent to a distant and inconvenient location and seeks to change venue, the respondent's representative may file an opposition to DHS's venue motion and note the following: the court's ability to call a respondent via video-conference, that the transfer impedes the respondent's right to representation, and the difficulty of traveling to the new detention center, particularly if the practitioner represents the respondent on a pro bono basis.[14]

D. Demographics of Those in Immigration Detention

The immigration detention system encompasses many different populations, including men, women, children with or without their parents,[15] and vulnerable populations such as pregnant, postpartum, and nursing individuals,[16] transgender individuals,[17] and those with serious medical and mental health conditions.[18] The immigration detention system also erroneously catches U.S. citizens in its wide net.[19]

---

[13] See id. § 1003.19(g) (discussing requirement that ICE notify the immigration judge (IJ) of transfer); Memorandum from MaryBeth Keller, Chief Immigration Judge, EOIR, OPPM 18-01, Change of Venue, at 5 (Jan. 17, 2018), www.justice.gov/eoir/page/file/1026726/download [hereinafter "2018 Change of Venue OPPM"].

[14] All filings with the immigration court, including an opposition to a change of venue motion, must comply with the Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1. The Immigration Court Practice Manual provides for a 10-day deadline for responding to motions for non-detained individuals, Ch. 3.1(b)(1)(B), but response deadlines in detained cases are "as specified by the Immigration Court," Ch. 3.1(b)(1)(C). For this reason, it is wise to file an opposition as soon as possible. If the DHS motion to change venue is granted, practitioners may also seek to appear by Webex or telephone. See infra Section V.B for a discussion of Webex hearings.

[15] The legal framework for, and practices governing the release of, children in immigration detention is beyond the scope of this guide.

[16] ICE, Directive 11032.4: Identification and Monitoring of Pregnant, Postpartum, or Nursing Individuals (July 1, 2021), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/detention/11032.4_IdentificationMonitoringPregnantPostpartumNursingIndividuals.pdf.

[17] Memorandum from Thomas Homan, Exec. Assoc. ICE Dir., Further Guidance Regarding the Care of Transgender Detainees (June 19, 2015), https://www.ice.gov/sites/default/files/documents/Document/2015/TransgenderCareMemorandum.pdf.

[18] ICE Directive 11063.2, Identification, Communication, Recordkeeping, and Safe Release Planning for Detained Individuals with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions and/or Who Are Determined to Be Incompetent by an Immigration Judge (Apr. 5, 2022), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2022/11063-2.pdf. ICE news releases describe the deaths of detained individuals in its custody including those with serious medical conditions. See ICE, Detainee Death Reporting, https://www.ice.gov/detain/detainee-death-reporting.

[19] See, e.g., Northwest Immigrant Rights Project Press Release, U.S. Government Agrees to $125,000 Settlement for U.S. Citizen's 7-Day Detention at the Northwest Detention Center (Sept. 21, 2021), https://www.nwirp.org/news-events/press-releases/posts/Government-Agrees-to-Settlement-for-Citizen%E2%80%99s-7-Day-Detention/index.html; Paige St. John & Joel Rubin, Must Reads: ICE Held an American Man in Custody for 1,273 Days. He's Not the Only One Who Had to Prove His Citizenship, Los Angeles Times, Apr. 27, 2018, https://www.latimes.com/local/lanow/la-me-citizens-ice-20180427-htmlstory.html.

E. Immigration Detention Conditions

The types of detention centers where ICE holds individuals, and the conditions at those facilities, vary. Some individuals are held in state or local jails that contract with ICE and receive payment for each immigration bed they offer. Others are held in facilities run directly by ICE. Still others are detained in facilities run by private for-profit prison companies.[20]

Immigrant and human rights groups have condemned the conditions of immigration detention facilities, including:

- the use of solitary confinement as a means of punishment or to "protect" vulnerable populations[21]
- substandard medical care[22]
- deaths of individuals while in immigration detention[23]

---

[20] For more about DHS's use of private prisons, see ACLU, Unchecked Growth: Private Prison Corporations and Immigration Detention, Three Years into the Biden Administration (Aug. 7, 2023), https://www.aclu.org/news/immigrants-rights/unchecked-growth-private-prison-corporations-and-immigration-detention-three-years-into-the-biden-administration. See also Ted Hesson, Mica Rosenberg & Kristina Cooke, Biden Vowed to Reform Immigration Detention. Instead, Private Prisons Benefited, Reuters, Aug. 7, 2023, https://www.reuters.com/world/us/biden-vowed-reform-immigration-detention-instead-private-prisons-benefited-2023-08-07/.

[21] See, e.g., DHS Office of Inspector General, ICE Needs to Improve Its Oversight of Segregation Use in Detention Facilities (Oct. 13, 2021), https://www.oig.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/assets/2021-10/OIG-22-01-Oct21.pdf; Press Release, Salvadoran Immigrants Describe Discriminatory and Arbitrary Use of Solitary Confinement at Moshannon Facility in New Civil Rights Complaint (Nov. 16, 2023), https://nipnlg.org/news/press-releases/salvadoran-immigrants-describe-discriminatory-and-arbitrary-use-solitary; see also ICE Policy 11065.1, Review of the Use of Segregation for ICE Detainees (Sept. 4, 2013), www.ice.gov/doclib/detention-reform/pdf/segregation_directive.pdf.

[22] See, e.g., National Immigrant Justice Center, Formerly Detained Immigrants and Doctors Join NIJC in Demanding Civil Rights Investigation into Inadequate Mental Health Care and Abusive Solitary Confinement Practices in ICE Detention (June 2, 2022), https://immigrantjustice.org/press-releases/formerly-detained-immigrants-and-doctors-join-nijc-demanding-civil-rights; Human Rights Watch, Code Red: The Fatal Consequences of Dangerously Substandard Medical Care in Immigration Detention (June 20, 2018), https://www.hrw.org/report/2018/06/20/code-red/fatal-consequences-dangerously-substandard-medical-care-immigration.

[23] See, e.g., Innovation Law Lab, Report: Sleep Deprivation, Torture Rooms, a Rigged Deportation Process, and Attempted Suicide at the Torrance County Detention Facility in Estancia, New Mexico (Feb. 15, 2023), https://innovationlawlab.org/media/2023.02.15-Torrance-Report.pdf; ACLU, DWN, and NIJC, Fatal Neglect: How ICE Ignores Deaths in Detention (2016),

- insufficient access to counsel and/or lack of legal orientation programs[24]
- a negligent and fatal response to the COVID-19 pandemic[25]
- the harmful psychological effects of detention,[26] and
- violation of wage and hour laws and involuntary labor through the "voluntary work program."[27]

ICE has adopted various detention standards over the years that purport to regulate conditions at immigration detention facilities.[28] ICE's failure to consistently adhere to those standards, however, has been well documented.[29]

---

https://www.detentionwatchnetwork.org/sites/default/files/reports/Fatal%20Neglect%20ACLU-DWN-NIJC.pdf; see also ICE Detainee Death Notifications found on ICE News Releases and Statements page, https://www.ice.gov/newsroom.

[24] See, e.g., ACLU, No Fighting Chance: ICE's Denial of Access to Counsel in U.S. Immigration Detention Centers (June 9, 2022), https://www.aclu.org/publications/no-fighting-chance-ices-denial-access-counsel-us-immigration-detention-centers.

[25] See, e.g., Center for Migration Studies, Immigrant Detention and COVID-19: How a Pandemic Exploited and Spread through the US Immigrant Detention System (Aug. 2020), https://cmsny.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/08/CMS-Detention-COVID-Report-08-12-2020.pdf; Detention Watch Network, Courting Catastrophe: How ICE Is Gambling with Immigrant Lives Amid a Global Pandemic (Mar. 2020), https://www.detentionwatchnetwork.org/sites/default/files/reports/DWN_Courting%20Catastrophe_How%20ICE%20is%20Gambling%20with%20Immigrant%20Lives%20Amid%20a%20Global%20Pandemic.pdf.

[26] See, e.g., Physicians for Human Rights, Harvard Medical School & Harvard Law School Immigration and Refugee Clinical Program, "Endless Nightmare": Torture and Inhuman Treatment in Solitary Confinement in U.S. Immigration Detention (Feb. 2024), https://phr.org/our-work/resources/endless-nightmare-solitary-confinement-in-us-immigration-detention/. Chanelle Diaz, et al., Harmful by Design—a Qualitative Study of the Health Impacts of Immigration Detention (Nov. 30, 2022), https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC9713141/pdf/11606_2022_Article_7914.pdf.

[27] See, e.g., Press Release: Immigration Detainees Win Federal Court Victory in Long-Running Lawsuit Against GEO Group (Oct. 21, 2022), https://towardsjustice.org/2022/10/21/press-release-immigration-detainees-win-federal-court-victory-in-long-running-lawsuit-against-geo-group/.

[28] See, e.g., ICE, 2011 Operations Manual Performance-Based National Detention Standards, www.ice.gov/detention-standards/2011; ICE, 2019 National Detention Standards for Non-Dedicated Facilities, https://www.ice.gov/detain/detention-management/2019.

[29] See, e.g., DHS Office of Inspector General, Results of Unannounced Inspection of ICE's Stewart Detention Center in Lumpkin, GA (July 27, 2023), https://www.oig.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/assets/2023-08/OIG-23-38-Jul23.pdf; DHS Office of Inspector General, Violations of ICE Detention Standards at Torrance County Detention Facility (Sept. 28, 2022), https://www.oig.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/assets/2022-09/OIG-22-75-Sep22.pdf; DHS Office of Inspector General, Violations of ICE Detention Standards at Folkston ICE Processing Center and Folkston Annex (June 30, 2022), https://www.oig.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/assets/2022-07/OIG-22-47-July22.pdf.

III. Overview of Legal Bases for Immigration Detention and Strategies for Securing Release

This section briefly discusses the different detention authorities found in the INA and the classes of individuals to which each applies.[30] Four primary statutory grounds exist under which DHS has authority to detain an individual. Some statutory grounds authorize "mandatory" detention, meaning that the immigration judge (IJ) has no authority to re-determine the person's custody or to set a bond, while others articulate possible discretionary avenues for release. The strategies available for a particular individual to seek release will depend on which classification they fall into. While the rest of this guide focuses on how to prepare and present an effective case for bond in immigration court, this section also gives a brief overview of other strategies for seeking release.

A. Discretionary Detention Under INA § 236(a)

Section 236(a) of the INA governs the detention of individuals who are arrested in the interior of the United States and placed in removal proceedings, and who are not subject to the mandatory detention provisions of section 236(c), which are discussed below. This provision is the general detention authority, which describes DHS's discretionary, or permissive, power to detain.[31] The statute provides that "[o]n a warrant issued by the Attorney General, [a noncitizen] may be arrested and detained pending a decision on whether the [noncitizen] is to be removed from the United States." It further directs that the Attorney General may continue to detain the individual, or may release the individual on either a "bond of at least $1,500 with security approved by, and containing conditions prescribed by, the Attorney General,"[32] or on conditional parole.[33]

---

[30] In addition to the detention authority discussed herein, there are other situations in which individuals held in immigration detention are not eligible to seek bond with the immigration court, including those in asylum-only proceedings who were admitted pursuant to the Visa Waiver Program and have not been served with a Notice to Appear, see Matter of A-W-, 25 I&N Dec. 45 (BIA 2009), and detention of certain suspected terrorists, see 8 U.S.C. § 1226a. These forms of detention are beyond the scope of this guide.

[31] See Nielsen v. Preap, 139 S. Ct. 954, 959 (2019) (noting that INA § 236(a) "sets out the general rule regarding [noncitizens'] arrest and detention pending a decision on removal").

[32] One example of a release condition that might be prescribed is participation in an alcohol treatment program for a respondent with a history of driving under the influence. See, e.g., E-C-, AXXX XXX 516 (BIA Apr. 20, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/349318995/E-C-AXXX-XXX-516-Bia-April-20-2017.

[33] INA § 236(a)(2)(B).

If an individual is detained under section 236(a), there are two principal fora where they may seek release:

(1) An individual can seek release at any time from ICE ERO, and
(2) An individual may seek release from an IJ after ICE makes its initial custody determination by requesting a custody redetermination hearing and asking for a lower bond or release on conditional parole. IJ release strategies are discussed in sections III and IV.

1. Negotiating Release with ERO

When ICE first arrests an individual and chooses to detain them, ICE either sets a bond amount or decides that the individual should not be released under any amount. This decision is usually recorded on Form I-286, Notice of Custody Determination. Since ICE has discretion to detain or release those apprehended under section 236(a),[34] a practitioner's first advocacy strategy may be to persuade ERO to release the individual on their own recognizance, or to set or lower the bond to an amount that the client is able to pay right away.[35] This is best accomplished as soon as possible, for example by speaking with the deportation officer while the client is being processed.[36] To communicate with ERO personnel about a client, the practitioner will need to submit a Form G-28, preferably signed by both the client and the representative.[37] Practitioners can contact the local ERO office or talk to local colleagues to learn the best way of submitting Form G-28, including the availability of fax or e-mail options.[38]

---

[34] See 8 CFR § 1236.1(c)(8) (noting that the DHS officer "may, in the officer's discretion, release [a noncitizen] not described in section 236(c)(1) of the Act . . . provided that the [noncitizen] must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the officer that such release would not pose a danger to property or persons, and that the [noncitizen] is likely to appear for any future proceeding").

[35] For more information about paying bond, see section V.C.1 infra.

[36] The regulations direct DHS to make a determination within 48 hours of arrest whether the individual "will be continued in custody or released on bond or recognizance and whether a notice to appear and warrant of arrest . . . will be issued." 8 CFR § 287.3(d).

[37] It is wise for practitioners to have an undated, signed G-28 on file for all clients so that they do not face time-consuming additional hurdles in the event of the client's detention. In some jurisdictions, practitioners have reported that ICE will accept a Form G-28 for a detained individual signed only by the representative. This was reportedly national ICE policy at least under the Obama administration. See AILA Infonet, AILA ICE Liaison Committee Meeting Minutes (Apr. 10, 2014), AILA Doc. No. 14102844, www.aila.org/infonet. If submitting the G-28 to ICE without a detained client's signature, it is advisable to write "Detained" in the client's signature line.

[38] A list of ICE ERO offices can be found on the ICE website, https://www.ice.gov/contact/field-offices?office=16 (last updated Mar. 12, 2024). Local ERO offices often share the list of officers and their contact information with legal orientation programs and AILA liaisons, so practitioners may want to reach out to local LOP or AILA liaison contacts to obtain contact information.

On February 28, 2024, ERO nationally launched ERO eFile, which allows legal representatives to file Form G-28 online on behalf of detained noncitizens.[39] Once the practitioner has submitted Form G-28, they may also request a copy of the client's Notice to Appear (NTA) or other immigration documents in ICE's possession; ICE may or may not respond to such a request.[40]

In making a persuasive case to ERO for the client's release, practitioners may submit a packet to the deportation officer, describing why the client would not pose a danger or flight risk if released, and including any evidence of positive equities and humanitarian factors weighing in favor of release. Practitioners can argue that the statute and implementing regulations require ICE to make an individualized custody determination based on flight risk and dangerousness, even though that determination may result in the decision to continue the client's detention.[41] Practitioners may wish to reach out to other knowledgeable practitioners in their jurisdiction to learn about the local ERO office's inclination toward such requests and the odds of success.[42] Factors to consider in advocating for release include:

- Lack of prior criminal history or immigration violations
- Family members in the United States with lawful immigration status, with whom the client would live if released
- Community ties, such as religious activities or volunteering
- Length of time in the United States
- Existence of any potential immigration relief
- The client's ability to pay bond, and

---

[39] ICE, Welcome to ERO eFile! (Mar. 15, 2024), https://www.ice.gov/eroefile.

[40] If ICE will not turn over documents, the practitioner can, where useful, explain to the IJ during proceedings the efforts they have made to move the matter forward by seeking the documents. See also American Immigration Council, Practice Advisory: Dent v. Holder and Strategies for Obtaining Documents from the Government During Removal Proceedings (June 12, 2012), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/sites/default/files/practice_advisory/dent_practice_advisory_6-8-12.pdf.

[41] See INA 236(a); 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(c)(8); Velesaca v. Decker, 458 F. Supp. 3d 224, 241 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (noting that ICE "do[es] not dispute[] that 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a) and its implementing regulations require ICE officials to make an individualized custody determination").

[42] Practitioners should also consider monitoring any relevant federal court litigation regarding challenges to ERO's release policies in their local jurisdictions. See, e.g., Velesaca v. Decker, 458 F. Supp. 3d 224 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (granting a preliminary injunction based on plaintiffs' likelihood of demonstrating the existence of ICE's "no-release policy"); Stipulation and Order of Dismissal and Settlement, Velasaca v. Decker, No. 1:20-cv-01803-AKH, Dkt. 175 (Mar. 10, 2022), https://www.nyclu.org/sites/default/files/field_documents/ecf_175_stipulation_and_order_of_dismissal_and_settlement_2022-03-10.pdf (settlement agreement requiring ICE's New York City Field Office to provide individualized custody reviews to people detained under section 236(a) within 48 hours of arrest and will consider special vulnerabilities and ability to pay).

- Any other humanitarian factors, such as the client's status as the primary caregiver for young children or individuals with health issues and the client's own medical or mental health conditions.[43]

If applicable, the request could state that the client consents to release on reasonable conditions of supervision, including an electronic monitoring device. Practitioners making release requests to ERO, who will likely be operating under significant time pressure, should take care to avoid introducing declarations or other evidence into the record unless they have been carefully vetted for accuracy to ensure that they will not create future problems in the case.

If the local ERO field office denies the request, practitioners should seek review of that decision through the ICE Case Review Process.[44] Practitioners should include a copy of the local ICE field office request as well as the field office's response. In the cover email or letter, practitioners should briefly and clearly summarize the facts of the case, highlight any positive factors in the client's case, include a statement that a request for release was previously denied by the local ICE field office, and summarize any supporting documentation included in the request.

2. Note on Release Policies Under the Biden Administration

In September of 2021, DHS Secretary Mayorkas released guidance setting forth DHS enforcement priorities as well as mitigating factors DHS should consider when exercising discretion.[45] However, in the United States v. Texas litigation challenging the Mayorkas Memo, the Supreme Court noted that the case concerned only DHS's arrest and prosecution policies, and that the government had represented to the Court that the memo "d[id] not affect continued detention of noncitizens already in federal custody."[46] This is a narrower reading of the Mayorkas Memo than how it was commonly interpreted. Regardless, practitioners can use the mitigating factors listed in the [43] See section IV.I infra for other aspects of dangerousness and flight risk analysis. See also infra, Note on Release Policies Under the Biden Administration, for policies practitioners can use to support release requests.

---

[44] ICE, Contact ICE About Detention Conditions or Request a Case Review, https://www.ice.gov/ICEcasereview (last updated Sept. 1, 2023).

[45] See Memorandum from Alejandro N. Mayorkas, DHS Sec'y, Guidelines for the Enforcement of Civil Immigration Law (Sept. 30, 2021), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/guidelines-civilimmigrationlaw.pdf [hereinafter "Mayorkas Memo"] (noting that "mitigating factors" include advanced or tender age; lengthy presence in the United States; a mental condition that may have contributed to the criminal conduct, or a physical or mental condition requiring care or treatment; status as a victim of crime or victim, witness, or party in legal proceedings; the impact of removal on family in the United States, such as loss of provider or caregiver; whether the noncitizen may be eligible for humanitarian protection or other immigration relief; military or other public service of the noncitizen or their immediate family; time since an offense and evidence of rehabilitation; and conviction was vacated or expunged).

[46] United States. v. Texas, 143 S. Ct. 1964, 1974 n.5 (2023).

Mayorkas Memo as a starting point in identifying the positive factors to highlight in a given client's case. Regardless of the Mayorkas Memo's direct applicability, ERO has broad discretion to make custody determinations at any time, even if they previously denied a client's release request. This means advocates should persistently and creatively pursue release, and proactively highlight all positive equities and mitigating factors. Practitioners may also wish to draw on any other recent ICE guidance helpful to the client's situation.[47] Practitioners may want to include a cover letter referencing relevant memos and linking the facts of the client's case to these factors, along with providing documentation.[48]

3. Habeas Petitions in Federal Court

In addition to seeking release with ERO and through an IJ custody redetermination hearing, discussed in sections IV and V below, it may be possible to challenge the legality of an individual's detention under section 236(a) through a habeas petition filed in federal district court. Many federal district courts have granted habeas petitions for individuals detained for a prolonged period under section 236(a) and have ordered a new bond hearing where the government bears the burden of proof.[49] Even when detention has not been prolonged, practitioners in some jurisdictions have [47] See, e.g., ICE Directive 11005.3: Using a Victim-Centered Approach with Noncitizen Crime Victims (Aug. 10, 2021), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2021/11005.3.pdf; ICE Directive 11063.2, Identification, Communication, Recordkeeping, and Safe Release Planning for Detained Individuals with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions and/or Who Are Determined to Be Incompetent by an Immigration Judge (Apr. 5, 2022), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2022/11063-2.pdf; Memorandum from Thomas Homan, Exec. Assoc. ICE Dir., Further Guidance Regarding the Care of Transgender Detainees (June 19, 2015), https://www.ice.gov/sites/default/files/documents/Document/2015/TransgenderCareMemorandum.pdf; ICE Directive: Identification and Monitoring of Pregnant, Postpartum, or Nursing Individuals (updated July 9, 2021), https://www.ice.gov/directive-identification-and-monitoring-pregnant-postpartum-or-nursing-individuals; ICE Directive 11064.3, Interests of Noncitizen Parents and Legal Guardians of Minor Children or Incapacitated Adults (July 14, 2022), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/news/releases/2022/11064.3.pdf.

---

[48] For tips on advocating for prosecutorial discretion with DHS, see NIPNLG's practice advisory, Advocating for Prosecutorial Discretion Under the Biden Administration's Prosecutorial Discretion Guidance (Sept 15, 2023), https://nipnlg.org/sites/default/files/2023-09/2023_Sept-PD-advisory.pdf.

[49] See, e.g., Hernandez-Lara v. Lyons, 10 F.4th 19 (1st Cir. 2021) (holding that respondent, who was detained for ten months, was entitled to a new bond hearing in which the government bears the burden of proof); Velasco Lopez v. Decker, 978 F.3d 842 (2d Cir. 2020) (affirming district court's order that due process required a new bond hearing where the government must establish dangerousness and flight risk by clear and convincing evidence after respondent had been detained for fifteen months); Ali v. Brott, 770 F. App'x 298 (8th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (concluding that district court erred in granting habeas but remanding to consider constitutional challenge to nearly two-year-detention of lawful permanent resident under INA § 236(a)); Marroquin Ambriz v. Barr, 420 F. Supp. 3d 953 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (concluding that because respondent had been subjected to prolonged detention under section 236(a), due process required a bond hearing where the government must establish flight risk or dangerousness by clear and convincing evidence); Vargas v. Wolf, No. 219CV02135KJDDJA, 2020 WL 1929842 (D. Nev. Apr. 21, 2020) (same); Rodriguez-Figueroa v. Barr, 442 F. Supp. 3d 549, 559 successfully challenged the agency's position that the respondent bears the burden of proof in bond proceedings to establish that they should be released.[50] A discussion of habeas is beyond the scope of this guide.[51]

B. Mandatory Detention Under INA § 236(c)

Section 236(c) of the INA directs that noncitizens with certain criminal convictions "shall [be] take[n] into custody" when "released" from criminal custody, unless they fall within a narrow exception allowing release for witness protection purposes.[52] The categories of individuals who are subject to INA § 236(c) are as follows:

- Those inadmissible for having "committed any offense" covered in INA § 212(a)(2) [which includes those "convicted of, or who admit[] having committed, or who admit[] committing acts which constitute the essential elements of" a crime involving moral turpitude not falling within the petty offense exception or a controlled substance

---

(W.D.N.Y. 2020) ("The Court finds due process entitles Petitioner to a bond hearing where the Government bears the burden of proof."); Mbewe v. Doll, No. 1:20-CV-01556, 2020 WL 7027599, at *2 (M.D. Pa. Nov. 30, 2020). But see Borbot v. Warden Hudson Cty. Corr. Facility, 906 F.3d 274, 279 (3d Cir. 2018).

[50] See, e.g., Ixchop Perez v. McAleenan, 435 F. Supp. 3d 1055, 1062 (N.D. Cal. 2020) (collecting cases) ("Accordingly, this court will join the 'consensus view' among District Courts concluding that after Jennings 'where . . . the government seeks to detain [a noncitizen] pending removal proceedings, it bears the burden of proving that such detention is justified.'"); Singh v. Barr, 400 F. Supp. 3d 1005, 1018 (S.D. Cal. 2019) ("The Court . . . concludes that the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause requires the Government to bear the burden of proving, by clear and convincing evidence, that continued detention is justified at a § 1226(a) bond redetermination hearing."). But see Rodriguez Diaz v. Garland, 53 F.4th 1189 (9th Cir. 2022) (rejecting argument that the government should have borne the burden of proof at bond hearing); Miranda v. Garland, 34 F.4th 338 (4th Cir. 2022) (holding that the respondent bearing the burden of proof in a bond hearing does not violate due process).

[51] For further information on challenges to immigration detention, see NILA and ABA Children's Immigration Law Academy, Nuts and Bolts of Habeas Corpus Petitions Challenging Immigration Detention (Jul. 2021), https://immigrationlitigation.org/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Practice-Advisory-Nuts-and-Bolts-Imm-Detention-Habeas.pdf; ACLU, Practice Advisory: Prolonged Detention Challenges After Jennings v. Rodriguez (Mar. 21, 2018), https://www.aclu.org/other/practice-advisory-prolonged-detention-challenges-after-jennings-v-rodriguez. NIPNLG members can also access free technical assistance related to habeas, detention, and federal litigation. NIPNLG, Technical Assistance, https://nipnlg.org/membership/technical-assistance.

[52] The provision further specifies that it applies "without regard to whether the [noncitizen] is released on parole, supervised release, or probation, and without regard to whether the [noncitizen] may be arrested or imprisoned again for the same offense." INA § 236(c). Despite the provision's language, DHS may release an individual detained under section 236(c). Practitioners have reported instances of ERO releasing an individual detained under this provision, for example, in particularly serious or urgent medical situations.

offense; and those convicted of two or more offenses for which the aggregate sentences to confinement were five years or more[53]]

- Those inadmissible under INA § 212(a)(3)(B) [relating to those alleged to have engaged in terrorist activities]
- Those deportable for "having committed any offense" covered in INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(ii) [convicted of two or more crimes involving moral turpitude not arising out of a single scheme], (A)(iii) [convicted of an aggravated felony], (B) [convicted of a controlled substance offense other than a single offense of possession for own use of thirty grams or less of marijuana; or drug abuser or addict], (C) [convicted of a firearms offense], or (D) [convicted of miscellaneous offenses including espionage, sabotage, treason, sedition, threats against the president, expedition against a friendly nation, violating the Military Selective Service Act or Trading with the Enemy Act, travel control provisions, or importation of [a noncitizen] for an immoral purpose]
- Those deportable under INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(i) "on the basis of an offense for which the [noncitizen] has been sentence [sic] to a term of imprisonment of at least 1 year" [convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude which has a maximum sentence of at least a year, committed within five years after the date of admission], and
- Those deportable under INA § 237(a)(4)(B) [relating to terrorist activities].

If an individual is detained under section 236(c), the following strategies can be used to seek release:

- Requesting a Joseph hearing before the IJ and arguing that detention was wrongly categorized, and
- Seeking habeas relief in federal court in cases of prolonged detention.

1. Joseph Hearings

In general, the IJ does not have jurisdiction to set a bond for an individual detained under section 236(c). However, the IJ does have jurisdiction to consider whether the individual has been properly classified as falling under section 236(c).[54] This is done through what is called a Joseph hearing,

---

[53] This provision also includes conduct-based, in addition to conviction-based, grounds of inadmissibility, such as those whom the government has a reason to believe have participated in controlled substance trafficking. See, e.g., INA § 212(a)(2)(C). It appears that DHS's practice is typically to rely on convictions, rather than conduct, in classifying individuals as subject to mandatory detention. In situations where there may be allegations of conduct-based inadmissibility under INA § 212(a)(2) in the absence of a conviction, DHS may also argue for high or no bond for such individuals based on allegations of dangerousness. See infra section V.A.5 (discussing mitigation of harmful evidence or facts).

[54] See 8 CFR § 1003.19(h)(2)(ii); Matter of Joseph, 22 I&N Dec. 799 (BIA 1999).

named after the BIA case that set forth the standard for such proceedings. A practitioner who believes that an individual's detention has been improperly categorized as falling under section 236(c) (as opposed to section 236(a)) can file a motion with the immigration court seeking a Joseph hearing. Generally, the legal standard governing Joseph hearings is whether the government is substantially unlikely to prevail in establishing the charge that triggers mandatory detention.[55] However, in Joseph hearings occurring in the jurisdiction of the Third Circuit, DHS bears the burden to prove that an individual is properly included within section 236(c), by a preponderance of the evidence.[56]

As is apparent from the complexity of these provisions, determining whether an individual properly falls within INA § 236(c) requires careful attention to the facts and the law—both criminal and immigration. A thorough discussion of the subject is beyond the scope of this guide. Practitioners are cautioned not to accept without scrutiny DHS's determination that a client is subject to section 236(c), as DHS sometimes makes mistakes in its legal analysis. Even if an offense appears to fall within one of the provisions above, the practitioner should reach out to experts to determine if there are legal arguments available that the client is not subject to section 236(c).

There are several ways to establish that the client does not in fact fall under the mandatory detention provision and thus is entitled to seek a bond. To determine whether a client is subject to section 236(c), it is necessary to analyze: (1) whether they are subject to the grounds of inadmissibility or deportability; (2) whether they have committed or been convicted of the criminal offense(s) alleged by DHS that serves as the basis for the mandatory detention[57]; and (3) whether the given criminal offense in fact falls within the relevant immigration ground of inadmissibility or deportability. This latter task will likely involve applying the categorical or modified categorical approach, which is a multi-step inquiry used to determine whether a given offense falls within an immigration criminal ground of removal.[58] There are many excellent resources on this subject.[59]

---

[55] Matter of Joseph, 22 I&N Dec. at 806.

[56] Gayle v. Warden Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Inst., 12 F.4th 321, 331–32 (3d Cir. 2021).

[57] For immigration purposes, "conviction" is a term of art and is defined as "a formal judgment of guilt of the [noncitizen] entered by a court or, if adjudication of guilt has been withheld, where- (i) a judge or jury has found the [noncitizen] guilty or the [noncitizen] has entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere or has admitted sufficient facts to warrant a finding of guilt, and (ii) the judge has ordered some form of punishment, penalty, or restraint on the [noncitizen's] liberty to be imposed." INA § 101(a)(48).

[58] See, e.g., Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243 (2016); Descamps v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2276 (2013); Moncrieffe v. Holder, 569 U.S. 184 (2013); Matter of Chairez, 26 I&N Dec. 819 (BIA 2016).

[59] Practice materials on criminal immigration issues include the following: Kathy Brady, Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Practice Advisory: How to Use the Categorical Approach Now (Oct. 2021), https://www.ilrc.org/sites/default/files/resources/2021_categorical_approach_oct_final2.pdf; Immigrant Defense Project and National Immigration Project, Practice Advisory: "Realistic Probability" in Immigration Categorical Approach Cases (Jun. 2021), https://www.immigrantdefenseproject.org/wp-content/uploads/Realistic-Probability-PA-FINAL-06.04.21-1.pdf;

Practitioners are also encouraged to seek mentoring from a knowledgeable local practitioner and reach out to "criminal immigration" experts with specific questions.[60]

Under BIA precedent, a respondent need not be charged in the NTA with the ground of deportability or inadmissibility supporting the exercise of mandatory detention.[61] If the ground of deportability or inadmissibility purportedly subjecting the individual to mandatory detention under section 236(c) is the same ground alleged in the NTA that makes the person removable, and the practitioner believes there are arguments that this ground does not apply, the practitioner should file a motion to terminate the removal proceedings (done separately from the bond proceedings), if they are counsel of record in that portion of the proceedings. In the context of an individual charged with a ground of deportability under INA § 237, it is the government's burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged ground applies,[62] and proceedings must be terminated if the government cannot meet its burden. This is a more favorable framework to the respondent than the Joseph standard. If the practitioner prevails on the motion to terminate, but DHS reserves appeal, the practitioner can seek bond with the IJ.

Aside from challenging the alleged criminal ground of deportability or inadmissibility, practitioners should explore arguments that a client falls outside the scope of INA § 236(c) based on the statute's "when released" language. To trigger mandatory detention under section 236(c), the individual must have been released from criminal custody after October 8, 1998,[63] and the release see also Maureen Sweeney, University of Maryland School of Law Immigration Clinic, videos available at www.youtube.com/watch?v=eDA-wVIedT0 and www.youtube.com/watch?v=9nlloIrsU0o&t=37s. When consulting practice advisories, practitioners should ensure that they incorporate the latest precedents. Practitioners should also conduct their own research and reach out to experts for tailored and up-to-date guidance.

---

[60] The National Immigration Project provides technical assistance to its members on their cases. See NIPNLG, Technical Assistance, https://nipnlg.org/membership/technical-assistance. In addition, some state public defender offices have "criminal immigration" experts who may assist with these inquiries.

[61] Matter of Kotliar, 24 I&N Dec. 124, 127 (BIA 2007) ("[W]here the basis for detention is not included in the charging document, the [noncitizen] must be given notice of the circumstances or convictions that provide the basis for mandatory detention and an opportunity to challenge the detention before the Immigration Judge during the bond redetermination hearing.").

[62] 8 CFR § 1240.8(a).

[63] See Matter of Adeniji, 22 I&N Dec. 1102 (BIA 1999); see also Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA), Division C of Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 303(b)(2), 110 Stat. 3009-586; Matter of West, 22 I&N Dec. 1405 (BIA 2000) (construing "released" in IIRIRA § 303(b)(2) to refer to release from physical custody); K-S-D-, AXXX XXX 521 (Feb. 8, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/374332703/K-S-D-AXXX-XXX-521-BIA-Feb-8-2018?secret_password=GZOv5I9jFHT8tJaPZP53 (respondent, who had a 2013 conviction for possession of a short-barreled shotgun, did not fall within INA § 236(c) because he was not "released from custody arising from his 2013 conviction for possession of a short-barrel shotgun").

must also have been related to an offense serving as a basis for the mandatory detention under INA § 236(c).[64] In Nielsen v. Preap, 139 S. Ct. 954 (2019), the Supreme Court held that INA § 236(c) provides for mandatory detention even if the noncitizen is not taken into custody until long after they are "released" from criminal custody. The Court noted that its decision did "not foreclose as-applied challenges—that is, constitutional challenges to applications of the statute as we have now read it."[65]

2. Habeas Petitions in Federal Court

Even if there is no dispute that the respondent's detention falls under section 236(c), it may be possible to seek release by filing a habeas petition in federal district court challenging the legality of the detention where it is prolonged. In Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281 (2018) (hereinafter "Rodriguez"), the Supreme Court held that individuals detained under section 236(c) do not have a statutory right to a bond hearing.[66] However, practitioners can still pursue habeas relief challenging the legality of prolonged detention under section 236(c) on purely constitutional grounds.[67] Since Rodriguez, individuals have won habeas relief arguing that their detention under 236(c) violated due process.[68]

---

[64] Matter of Garcia Arreola, 25 I&N Dec. 267 (BIA 2010).

[65] Preap, 139 S. Ct. at 972; see also ACLU & Asian Americans Advancing Justice, Practice Advisory: Constitutional Challenges to Mandatory Immigration Detention After Nielsen v. Preap (July 2019), https://www.aclu.org/sites/default/files/field_document/2019_07_06_preap_advisory.pdf.

[66] The Rodriguez injunction remains in effect within the Central District of California. Rodriguez v. Marin, No. 2:07-cv-03239-TJH-RNB (C.D. Cal.), ECF No. 353. The Ninth Circuit ordered the injunction vacated on October 19, 2021, in Rodriguez v. Barr, No. 20-55770, 2021 WL 4871067 (9th Cir. Oct. 19, 2021), but that order remains pending on rehearing (with no mandate yet issued).

[67] Note that the Supreme Court has held that detention under section 236(c) "for the brief period necessary for . . . removal proceedings" is facially constitutional and does not violate due process requirements. Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 513 (2003). This holding does not preclude challenges to prolonged immigration detention under 236(c).

[68] See, e.g., German Santos v. Warden Pike Cty. Corr. Facility, 965 F.3d 203, 206 (3d Cir. 2020) (affirming the Third Court's pre-Rodriguez precedent that when the length of section 236(c) detention becomes unreasonable, noncitizens have a due process right to a bond hearing where the government bears the burden of proof); Dorley v. Normand, No. 5:22-CV-62, 2023 WL 3620760 (S.D. Ga. Apr. 3, 2023), report and recommendation adopted, No. 5:22-CV-62, 2023 WL 3174227 (S.D. Ga. May 1, 2023) (concluding that detention under section 236(c) had become unconstitutionally prolonged at 20 months and required a bond hearing); Hylton v. Decker, 502 F. Supp. 3d 848 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (ordering a bond hearing for individual detained for 14 months under section 236(c)); Rodriguez v. Nielsen, No. 18-cv-04187-TSH (N.D. Cal. Jan. 7, 2019) (concluding that 440-day detention under INA § 236(c) with no specific end date in sight violated the petitioner's due process rights and ordering an individualized bond hearing); Hechavarria v. Sessions, No. 15-CV-1058, 2018 WL 5776421, at *1 (W.D.N.Y. Nov. 2, 2018) (concluding that petitioner's five-year detention under INA § 236(c) violated due process and requiring that he be released unless a "neutral decision-maker determines by clear and convincing evidence that his detention necessarily supports a legitimate and compelling regulatory purpose"); Portillo v. Hott, 322 F. Supp. 3d

In addition to arguments about the unconstitutional nature of prolonged mandatory detention, practitioners could consider other challenges to the legality of detention under section 236(c). Preap left open the possibility of as-applied due process challenges to section 236(c)'s "when released" language, and such a challenge might be brought for an individual whose criminal offense was long ago and who has shown rehabilitation.[69] Practitioners could also consider the argument that due process requires that section 236(c) not be applied to those who raise a substantial challenge to removal or a substantial claim to relief from removal.[70] A discussion of habeas is beyond the scope of this guide;[71] practitioners, however, should consider habeas relief where appropriate and should partner with those with federal court experience in seeking habeas relief. Partners with federal court experience might include pro bono law firms and law school clinics.

3. Note on Respondents with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions

A 2013 EOIR memo announced a number of procedural protections for respondents with serious mental disorders or conditions.[72] Among other measures, the memo directs that "detainees who were identified as having a serious mental disorder or condition that may render them mentally incompetent to represent themselves and who have been held in immigration detention for at

---

698, 709 (E.D. Va. 2018) (given prolonged detention under INA § 236(c), due process required individualized bond hearing where government must prove flight risk or dangerousness by clear and convincing evidence).

[69] See ACLU & Asian Americans Advancing Justice, Practice Advisory: Constitutional Challenges to Mandatory Immigration Detention After Nielsen v. Preap (July 2019), https://www.aclu.org/other/practice-advisory-constitutional-challenges-mandatory-immigration-detention-after-nielsen-v.

[70] See, e.g., Casas v. Devane, No. 15-CV-8112, 2015 WL 7293598, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 19, 2015) (where habeas petitioner had good-faith basis for challenging removal, court concluded that due process required an individualized bond hearing); Papazoglou v. Napolitano, No. 1:12-CV-00892, 2012 WL 1570778, at *5–6 (N.D. Ill. May 3, 2012) (where lawful permanent resident had been granted relief from removal by the IJ, this was a "legitimate defense to his removability" and due process required a bond hearing); see also Gayle v. Warden Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Inst., 12 F.4th 321, 326 (3d Cir. 2021) (holding that mandatory detention under section 236(c) is constitutional "even as applied to noncitizens who have substantial defenses to removal" but that in a Joseph hearing, the government bears the burden of establishing the noncitizen is subject to mandatory detention).

[71] For other resources on habeas in the context of immigration detention, see note 51 supra.

[72] See Press Release, EOIR, Department of Justice and the Department of Homeland Security Announce Safeguards for Unrepresented Immigration Detainees with Serious Mental Disorders or Conditions (Apr. 22, 2013), www.justice.gov/eoir/pr/department-justice-and-department-homeland-security-announce-safeguards-unrepresented. These changes were announced during the pendency of class action litigation in the Ninth Circuit on behalf of immigration detainees with mental disabilities, which resulted in a judgment providing protections to certain detainees in Arizona, California, and Washington. Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, No. 10-02211, 2013 WL 3674492 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2013); see ACLU, Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, www.aclu.org/cases/franco-gonzalez-v-holder (updated Apr. 24, 2013).

least six months will also be afforded a bond hearing." Practitioners who represent individuals with competency issues could consider arguing that this memo applies and requires a bond hearing after six months in custody.[73]

Certain individuals detained in California, Arizona, and Washington who are Franco class members have additional rights under a permanent court injunction.[74] The class member definition closely follows the 2013 EOIR memo definition of pro se individuals in immigration custody who have a serious mental disorder or defect that renders them mentally incompetent to represent themselves in detention or removal proceedings. These individuals are entitled to qualified representation under the injunction. Those who have been detained for more than 180 days are also entitled to a bond hearing where the government bears the burden to show by clear and convincing evidence that continued detention is justified.

C. Detention Under INA § 235(b) of "Arriving" Noncitizens and Other Individuals in the Credible Fear Process

1. Detention of Arriving Noncitizens

The immigration statutes and regulations provide for the detention of "arriving" noncitizens, and the regulations state that IJs do not have authority to re-determine the custody of arriving noncitizens.[75] An arriving noncitizen is defined as "an applicant for admission coming or attempting to come into the United States at a port-of-entry, or [a noncitizen] seeking transit through the United States at a port-of-entry, or [a noncitizen] interdicted in international or United States waters and brought into the United States by any means . . . ."[76] Arriving [noncitizens] include those seeking admission at a port of entry and can include asylum seekers and returning lawful permanent residents who are considered to be seeking admission.[77]

---

[73] For further discussion of the legal protections afforded to noncitizens with mental illness in removal proceedings, see Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc., Representing Noncitizens with Mental Illness (last updated May 12, 2020), https://cliniclegal.org/resources/removal-proceedings/representing-noncitizens-mental-illness.

[74] Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, No. 10-02211, 2013 WL 8115423 (C.D. Cal. 2013).

[75] INA § 235(b)(2)(A) (detention of other applicants for admission who are not "clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted"); 8 CFR § 1003.19(h)(2)(i)(B) (listing "arriving" noncitizens among the categories of individuals for whom IJs are barred from reviewing custody).

[76] 8 CFR §§ 1.2, 1001.1(q).

[77] Lawful permanent residents are determined to be seeking admission in certain circumstances specified at INA § 101(a)(13)(C), including those who have committed an offense identified in INA § 212(a)(2), such as a crime involving moral turpitude, and have not received a section 212(h) waiver or cancellation of removal. Lawful permanent residents who make brief, casual, and innocent departures and whose conviction pre-dates IIRIRA are not subject to inadmissibility grounds and are not considered arriving noncitizens. Vartelas v. Holder, 566 U.S. 257 (2012).

Practitioners should assess whether a client has been properly classified as an arriving noncitizen. Removable individuals who are apprehended within the United States, not at a port of entry, not placed into expedited removal proceedings, and not subject to a final order of removal, should be detained under INA § 236, and the IJ should have jurisdiction to hold a bond hearing accordingly. Practitioners can determine where the client was apprehended by speaking with the client or trying to obtain a copy of Form I-213, Record of Deportable/Inadmissible Alien, a document that DHS prepares when it processes an individual for removal, from ICE ERO or OPLA. If a client has been erroneously classified as an arriving noncitizen, practitioners should gather proof and could attempt to persuade DHS to correct the NTA in addition to challenging the arriving noncitizen classification in the removal proceeding. Practitioners could also attempt to challenge the arriving noncitizen classification in a bond proceeding and thus argue that the client is eligible for bond. However, the IJ or DHS may take the position that the regulations do not give the IJ authority to determine whether a respondent is improperly included within the regulatory list found at 8 CFR § 1003.19(h)(2)(i)(B) describing those not eligible for an IJ bond redetermination as arriving noncitizen. Practitioners could argue that in Matter of Oseiwusu, 22 I&N Dec. 19 (BIA 1998), the BIA reached the merits of evaluating whether a respondent was an arriving noncitizen before determining whether the IJ had authority to consider a bond request.[78]

2. Detention of Asylum Seekers Subjected to Expedited Removal Proceedings

The immigration statutes generally allow for expedited removal of arriving noncitizens and certain other noncitizens who have recently entered the United States unlawfully[79] and who are

---

[78] See also Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(b) ("[A]n Immigration Judge has jurisdiction to rule on whether he or she has jurisdiction to conduct a bond hearing."); EOIR, BIA Practice Manual, Ch. 7.2(b)(3), https://www.justice.gov/eoir/reference-materials/bia ("The Board has jurisdiction to rule on whether an Immigration Judge has jurisdiction to make a bond determination.") [hereinafter "BIA Practice Manual"]. In several unpublished decisions the BIA has recognized an IJ's authority to make this predicate determination. See, e.g., A-R-S-, AXXX-XXX-161 (June 25, 2020) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/470813400/A-R-S-AXXX-XXX-161-BIA-June-25-2020?secret_password=tGGIxEtdntCWLUpRAlk8; A-M-Y-, AXXX XXX 169 (Feb. 2, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/371997389/A-M-Y-AXXX-XXX-169-BIA-Feb-2-2018?secret_password=owtyrKhKESBoxrjiZri9 (concluding that IJ had jurisdiction over bond hearing, despite fact that NTA charged respondent as being an "arriving" noncitizen, by finding that the respondent was a "member of the class of [noncitizens] designated pursuant to the authority in section 235(b)(l)(A)(iii) of the Act"); L-E-V-H-, AXXX XXX 504 (Dec. 21, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/398005600/L-E-V-H-AXXX-XXX-504-BIA-Dec-21-2018?secret_password=t9MY64vnVupMdeka8eLZ (concluding that respondent was not an "arriving" noncitizen and was thus bond eligible, where NTA did not charge him as an "arriving" noncitizen and despite fact that he "may have testified that he 'turned himself in to officials at the border,'" since it was not clear that he "presented himself at a port-of-entry").

[79] In 2019, the Trump administration expanded expedited removal to the full reach of the statute—that is, to any noncitizen who has not been "admitted or paroled into the United States, and who has not affirmatively shown, to the inadmissible based on certain grounds[80] (other than those who have a verified claim to U.S. citizenship, lawful permanent residence, refugee, or asylee status),[81] unless the noncitizen asserts an intention to apply for asylum or a fear of persecution.[82] If an individual in expedited removal proceedings claims fear of persecution, they must be referred to an asylum officer for a "credible fear" interview.[83] Asylum seekers in expedited removal proceedings who are found to have a credible fear must be referred for section 240 proceedings to present their asylum claim before an IJ.[84]

In Jennings v. Rodriguez, the Supreme Court interpreted INA § 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) to mandate detention of arriving asylum seekers who claim fear of persecution or torture, are referred for a credible fear interview, and are determined to have a credible fear.[85] The Court construed INA § 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) as requiring the detention of such asylum seekers pending the resolution of the section 240 proceedings, with the option of discretionary release on parole.[86] Relying on the Supreme Court's Rodriguez decision, in 2019 the Attorney General issued Matter of M-S-, 27 I&N Dec. 509 (A.G. 2019), in which he ruled that asylum seekers who entered without inspection and whom DHS placed in expedited removal proceedings, are also not eligible for release on bond.[87] This decision overruled satisfaction of an immigration officer, that the noncitizen has been physically present in the United States continuously for the 2-year period immediately prior to the date of the determination of inadmissibility under this subparagraph." INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(iii)(II); see DHS, Designating Aliens for Expedited Removal, 84 Fed. Reg. 35409 (July 23, 2019). Previously, expedited removal had applied to arriving noncitizen as well as those who are apprehended within 100 miles of the Canadian or Mexican border and within 14 days of arrival. In 2022, the Biden administration reversed the Trump's administration's expansion of expedited removal. See DHS, Rescission of the Notice of July 23, 2019, Designating Aliens for Expedited Removal, 87 Fed. Reg. 16022 (Mar. 21, 2022).

---

[80] Specifically, those who are inadmissible for misrepresentation or lack of proper entry documents under INA § 212(a)(6)(C) or (a)(7). See INA § 235(b)(1)(A).

[81] See INA § 235(b)(1)(C); 8 CFR § 235.3(b)(5). If an individual with a claim to U.S. citizenship, lawful permanent resident, refugee, or asylee status is improperly placed in expedited removal proceedings, they should assert the claim and seek to prevent the issuance of an expedited removal order or have an order already issued canceled. If DHS instead places such an individual in section 240 proceedings, any available arguments for termination should be explored.

[82] See INA § 235(b)(1)(A).

[83] See INA § 235(b)(1)(A)(ii).

[84] See 8 CFR § 208.30(f).

[85] 583 U.S. 281, 297 (2018).

[86] See discussion of parole infra; Rodriguez, 583 U.S. at 287–88 (citing parole authority found at INA § 212(d)(5)(A), 8 CFR § 235.3, and 8 CFR § 212.5(b)).

[87] In 2019, a federal district court effectively overruled Matter of M-S- by issuing a preliminary injunction requiring that asylum seekers who enter without inspection be given a bond hearing if they receive a positive credible fear determination. Order on Motions re Preliminary Injunction, Padilla v. ICE, No. C18-929 MJP (W.D. Wash. July 2, 2019). However, that injunction has since been vacated in light of DHS v. Thuraissigiam, 140 S. Ct. 1959 (2020), and the litigation remains ongoing at the district court. See Padilla v. U.S. Immigr. & Customs Enf't, No. C18-928 MJP, 2023 WL 8370157 (W.D. Wash. Dec. 4, 2023).

prior BIA precedent that had recognized this group's eligibility to seek a bond re-determination before the IJ in a 2005 decision.[88]

If an asylum seeker in expedited removal proceedings is found not to have a credible fear, the government's view is that mandatory detention is authorized under INA § 235(b)(1)(B)(iii)(IV).[89] This section provides for detention until after an IJ reviews the negative credible fear finding and, if such a finding is affirmed, until removal. Such individuals may also request discretionary release on parole from DHS.

****

If an individual is an arriving noncitizen or was processed through expedited removal, practitioners can employ several release strategies, including:

- Making a parole request with ICE, and
- Requesting habeas relief in federal court by challenging prolonged detention or legality of parole procedures used.

3. Parole Requests

Although arriving noncitizens and those subjected to expedited removal are not able to seek bond before the IJ, they can seek release by filing a parole request with ICE, in an exercise of that agency's discretion.[90] The immigration statute and regulations direct that ICE can parole individuals on a case-by-case basis for urgent humanitarian reasons or significant public benefit.[91] A December

[88] Matter of X-K-, 23 I&N Dec. 731 (BIA 2005).

[89] Some practitioners have argued that detention of individuals found not to have a credible fear is governed by INA § 241 because they have a final order of removal. Those detained under § 241 could have claims for release due to prolonged detention under the rule announced in Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001). No court has adopted this view to the knowledge of the authors.

[90] See 8 CFR § 235.3(c) (parole for arriving noncitizen placed in removal proceedings); 8 CFR § 235.3(b)(2)(iii) (parole during expedited removal process). There are multiple statutory forms of parole, including parole under INA § 212(d)(5) and conditional parole under INA § 236(a)(2)(B). The type of parole discussed here is governed by INA § 212(d)(5). It is important to identify the relevant type of parole because it can affect eligibility for other immigration remedies. For example, a person paroled under INA § 212(d)(5) is considered paroled into the United States for purposes of adjustment under INA § 245(a), while a person granted conditional parole under INA § 236(a)(2)(B) is not. See Matter of Cabrera-Fernandez, 28 I&N Dec. 747, 748 (BIA 2023).

[91] INA § 212(d)(5); 8 CFR § 212.5(b) (requiring that the parole applicant have one of the following factors: (1) a serious medical condition such that continued detention would be inappropriate; (2) be pregnant; (3) be a juvenile meeting certain requirements; (4) be a witness in proceedings before a judicial, administrative, or legislative body in the United States; (5) be an individual whose continued detention is not in the "public interest").

2009 ICE policy entitled "Parole of Arriving Aliens Found to Have a Credible Fear of Persecution or Torture" describes the process by which an individual can be released on parole following a positive credible fear interview.[92] Thus, regardless of whether an asylum seeker is eligible for a bond hearing, they should be considered for parole under the ICE parole directive. Parole requests can be made to ERO in the same manner in which other requests for release are made and using similar factors discussed above in Part 1 of this section.[93]

4. Habeas Petitions

It may also be possible to challenge the legality of prolonged detention of individuals detained under INA § 235(b) through a habeas petition filed in federal district court. In Rodriguez, the Supreme Court held that sections 235(b)(1)(B)(ii) and (b)(2)(A) "mandate detention of applicants for admission until certain proceedings have concluded."[94] However, the Court remanded for consideration of whether the Constitution requires bond hearings for individuals held pursuant to section 235(b). Given Rodriguez, prolonged detention arguments should be crafted on purely constitutional grounds rather than under a theory of constitutional avoidance. Indeed, after Rodriguez, many district courts have concluded in individual habeas cases that the prolonged detention of "arriving" noncitizens and others detained under section 235(b) violated due process.[95] Although some federal district courts have held that the Supreme Court's decision in DHS v. Thuraissigiam, 140 S. Ct. 1959 (2020), forecloses due process challenges to detention of "arriving" [92] See ICE Directive No. 11002.1, Parole of Arriving Aliens Found to Have a Credible Fear of Persecution or Torture § 6.2 (Dec. 8, 2009), www.ice.gov/doclib/dro/pdf/11002.1-hd-parole_of_arriving_aliens_found_credible_fear.pdf) [hereinafter "ICE Parole Directive"] (directing that parole generally be granted after an individual establishes a credible fear, provided they establish their identity and do not pose a danger or flight risk).

---

[93] For more information on the process for seeking parole, see American Immigration Council, The Use of Parole Under Immigration Law (last modified Jan. 10, 2023), www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/research/use-parole-under-immigration-law.

[94] 583 U.S. 281, 297 (2018).

[95] See, e.g., Brissett v. Decker, 324 F. Supp. 3d 444, 451–52 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (concluding that nine-month detention of arriving lawful permanent resident detained at entry was unreasonably prolonged requiring an individualized determination about flight risk and dangerousness); Kouadio v. Decker, 352 F. Supp. 3d 235 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (arriving asylum seeker detained almost two years with pending petition for review of denied asylum claim and judicial stay was "entitled to a bond hearing at which the government must show, by clear and convincing evidence, that Petitioner's dangerousness or flight risk justifies his continued detention"); Pierre v. Doll, 350 F. Supp. 3d 327, 332 (M.D. Pa. 2018) (concluding that given prolonged detention of individual detained under INA § 235(b) due process required individualized bond hearing); Lett v. Decker, 346 F. Supp. 3d 379, 384 (S.D.N.Y. 2018) (concluding that due process required individualized bond hearing for individual detained for nearly ten months under INA § 235(b) where government had to prove by clear and convincing evidence that continued detention was justified, and the IJ must consider ability to pay and alternative conditions of release).

noncitizens and others detained shortly after unlawful entry,[96] others have granted habeas to individuals detained under INA § 235(b), concluding that their prolonged detention violated due process.[97] Practitioners should review the case law governing their particular jurisdiction to assess the viability of habeas relief in this context.

Practitioners could also explore arguments that the government failed to make an individualized parole determination, failed to follow its own parole directive, or otherwise acted unlawfully in its procedures for denying parole.[98] For example, during the Trump administration, there was a striking drop in the rate of parole grants to individuals who demonstrated credible fear, with practitioners reporting denials in "virtually all cases" in some jurisdictions.[99] Practitioners in numerous jurisdictions have successfully challenged the procedures employed by ICE to deny parole to asylum seekers in federal courts.[100]

A full discussion of habeas relief is beyond the scope of this guide.[101]

---

[96] See, e.g., Zelaya-Gonzalez v. Matuszewski, No. 23-CV-151 JLS (KSC), 2023 WL 3103811, at *3 (S.D. Cal. Apr. 25, 2023) (holding that arriving noncitizen detained under 235(b) "has no Fifth Amendment right to a bond hearing or to parole pending his removal proceedings"); Gonzales Garcia v. Rosen, 513 F. Supp. 3d 329, 334 (W.D.N.Y. 2021) (granting government's motion for reconsideration of court's previous order mandating an individualized bond hearing for an asylum seeker detained under INA § 235(b), concluding that under Thuraissigiam petitioner was not entitled to the procedural protections of the Due Process Clause); D.A.V.V. v. Warden, Irwin Cnty. Det. Ctr., No. 7:20-CV-159-WLS-MSH, 2020 WL 13240240, at *6 (M.D. Ga. Dec. 7, 2020) (concluding that under Thuraissigiam, an arriving noncitizen's "procedural due process rights entitle them only to the relief provided by the INA").

[97] See, e.g., Arechiga v. Archambeault, No. 223CV00600CDSVCF, 2023 WL 5207589 (D. Nev. Aug. 11, 2023); Leke v. Hott, 521 F. Supp. 3d 597, 604 (E.D. Va. 2021); Kydyrali v. Wolf, 499 F. Supp. 3d 768, 774 (S.D. Cal. 2020); Mbalivoto v. Holt, 527 F. Supp. 3d 838, 848 (E.D. Va. 2020).

[98] See, e.g., Marczak v. Greene, 971 F.2d 510, 515 (10th Cir. 1992) (interpreting prior version of parole regulations and noting that "a district director who decides parole applications on the basis of broad, non-individualized policies engages in . . . extra-procedural rule-making" and "in each case a district director must determine whether a particular person is likely to flee, and whether that person's continued detention would be in the public interest").

[99] See Damus v. Nielsen, 313 F. Supp. 3d 317 (D.D.C. 2018) (noting that during the Trump administration, ICE "implemented a de facto policy of denying parole in virtually all cases" at certain ICE field offices).

[100] See, e.g., id; Aracely, R. v. Nielsen, 319 F. Supp. 3d 110, 122 (D.D.C. 2018); Mons v. McAleenan, No. CV 19-1593 (JEB), 2019 WL 4225322, at *3 (D.D.C. Sept. 5, 2019). For more information about the Damus injunction including an explanation of who falls within the class, see American Civil Liberties Union, Center for Gender & Refugee Studies & Human Rights First, Practice Advisory: Damus v. Nielsen Parole of Arriving Asylum Seekers Who Have Passed Credible Fear (updated July 30, 2018), https://www.aclu.org/legal-document/damus-parole-advisory.

[101] See resources discussed in note 51 supra.

D. Detention Under INA § 241 for Individuals with Administratively Final Orders of Removal

Section 241 of the INA governs the detention and release of individuals who have been ordered removed. This detention scheme applies to those with administratively final removal orders,[102] including those granted withholding of removal and relief under the Convention Against Torture.[103] In 2021, the Supreme Court held that detention of individuals subject to a reinstated removal order and who are pursuing withholding or deferral of removal is governed by section 241, not by section 236.[104]

If an individual in detention has an order of removal, release strategies will depend on the procedural posture of the case but include:

- For persons subject to a judicial stay of removal based on a pending petition for review that they are detained under INA § 236 and are entitled to a bond hearing
- For individuals detained under INA § 241(a)(6), seeking release under the post-order custody review regulatory process,
- For individuals who have been granted withholding of removal and relief under the Convention Against Torture, arguing that ICE policies mandate their release absent exceptional circumstances, and
- Seeking habeas relief in federal court if detention becomes prolonged.

1. Detention Classification for Individuals with Pending Petitions for Review

An important initial consideration is whether or not an individual's detention is properly categorized as falling under INA § 241. If an individual has an administratively final removal order, but that order is stayed pending judicial review of the order in a U.S. court of appeals, they may have an argument that the detention is governed by INA § 236. While DHS may take the position that such an individual is detained under INA § 241, some U.S. courts of appeal have held that such individuals are detained under INA § 236.[105]

---

[102] The regulations describe various circumstances under which an order of removal becomes final. 8 CFR § 1241.1. Typically, an order becomes final if the respondent is ordered removed in absentia, if the respondent fails to file an appeal of the IJ's decision with the BIA, or if the BIA dismisses the respondent's appeal.

[103] 8 CFR § 241.4(b)(3).

[104] Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, 141 S. Ct. 2271 (2021).

[105] See, e.g., Hechavarria v. Sessions, 891 F.3d 49, 57 (2d Cir. 2018) (concluding that section 236 governed the detention of the petitioner, where there was a judicial stay of removal and a pending petition for review); Leslie v. Att'y Gen., 678 F.3d 265, 271 (3d Cir. 2012) (concluding that section 236, not section 241, governed detention where there was a judicial stay of removal pending further judicial review, and ordering an individualized bond hearing as the noncitizen's detention had

2. Detention Authority for Individuals with Final Removal Orders Who Are Detained During the "Removal Period"

For those individuals who are correctly classified as detained under INA § 241, the statute provides for detention during the 90-day "removal period."[106] The detention authority during the removal period is found at INA § 241(a)(2). The removal period begins on the latest of the following events:

- The date the removal order becomes "administratively final"[107]
- If an individual's removal is stayed by a court pending judicial review, the date of the court's "final order," or
- If the individual is detained other than "under an immigration process," the date the individual is released from detention.[108]

Once the removal period begins, DHS has 90 days to execute the removal order. The 90-day removal period can be extended, with the individual remaining in detention, if they "fail[] or refuse[] to make timely application in good faith for travel or other documents necessary to the [noncitizen's] departure or conspire[] or act[] to prevent the [noncitizen's] removal subject to an order of removal."[109]

3. Post-Order Custody Reviews of Individuals Who Are Detained Beyond the "Removal Period"

If the individual is not removed within the removal period, then the statute and regulations list circumstances and conditions under which they may be released subject to DHS supervision.[110] At this point, detention authority shifts to INA § 241(a)(6). This section authorizes detention beyond the removal period of individuals who: become "unreasonably long"); Prieto-Romero v. Clark, 534 F.3d 1053, 1062 (9th Cir. 2008) ("Because Prieto-Romero filed a petition for review and our court entered a stay, his detention is governed by § [236(a)]; only if we enter a final order denying his petition for review will the statutory source of the Attorney General's detention authority shift from § [236(a)] to § [241(a)]"); Bejjani v. INS, 271 F.3d 670, 689 (6th Cir. 2001), abrogated on other grounds by Fernandez-Vargas v. Gonzales, 548 U.S. 30 (2006) (concluding that INA § 241 does not authorize detention while a judicial stay of removal is pending). But see Akinwale v. Ashcroft, 287 F.3d 1050 (11th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (assuming, without analysis, that detention pending a judicial stay is governed by INA § 241).

---

[106] INA § 241(a)(2); see also 8 CFR § 241.3(a).

[107] The regulations describe various circumstances under which an order of removal becomes final. 8 CFR § 1241.1.

[108] INA § 241(a)(1)(B); 8 CFR § 241.4(g)(1)(i).

[109] INA § 241(a)(1)(C); 8 CFR § 241.4(g)(1)(ii).

[110] See INA § 241(a)(3); 8 CFR § 241.4.

- Are inadmissible under INA § 212
- Are removable under INA § 237(a)(1)(C) (violators of nonimmigrant status or conditions of entry), (a)(2) (criminal grounds of deportability), or (a)(4) (security-related grounds), or
- Have been determined to be a "risk to the community or unlikely to comply with the order of removal."[111]

The regulations describe who may be detained beyond the removal period, as well as the process for release after the removal period has ended.[112] An individual falling within INA § 241(a)(6) may be released after the removal period's expiration if the person "demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Attorney General or her designee that their release will not pose a danger to the community or to the safety of other persons or to property or a significant risk of flight pending such [noncitizen's] removal from the United States."[113] In order to release an individual under these provisions, DHS "must conclude" that: (1) travel documents are not available or the individual's immediate removal is not "practicable or not in the public interest"; (2) the individual is nonviolent and "likely to remain nonviolent if released"; (3) the individual is "not likely to pose a threat to the community following release"; and (4) the individual is not likely to violate release conditions or "pose a significant flight risk if released."[114] DHS is to weigh various factors in making a decision about continued detention, including the individual's disciplinary history while in custody, "criminal conduct and criminal convictions," mental health records, evidence of rehabilitation, positive factors such as ties to the United States, prior immigration history, history of failure to appear for proceedings, and any other "probative" information about whether the individual is likely to adjust to community life, commit violent or criminal acts, pose a danger to self, others, or property, or violate release conditions.[115]

The regulations describe the process by which custody determinations and periodic reviews are to be conducted.[116] They also describe review procedures for individuals detained beyond the removal period who have "provided good reason to believe there is no significant likelihood of removal to the country to which they were ordered removed, or to a third country, in the reasonably foreseeable future."[117] If DHS concludes that there is no significant likelihood of the individual's

---

[111] INA § 241(a)(6).
[112] 8 CFR §§ 241.4, 241.5, 241.13, 241.14.
[113] Id. § 241.4(d)(1).
[114] Id. § 241.4(e).
[115] Id. § 241.4(f). Some practitioners have reported ICE failure to follow the procedures for post-order custody reviews. Practitioners who encounter instances in which ICE fails to follow the regulations may wish to reach out to My Khanh Ngo, at the ACLU Immigrants' Rights Project, MNgo@aclu.org.
[116] 8 CFR § 241.4.
[117] Id. § 241.13(a).

removal in the reasonably foreseeable future, then the individual should be promptly released on conditions, unless there are "special circumstances justifying continued detention."[118]

If an individual is released after the end of the removal period, the regulations direct that they should be released on an order of supervision and subject to different conditions as determined appropriate by DHS.[119] DHS can revoke release in various circumstances, including if the individual violates the conditions of release, when the "purposes of release have been served," when it is "appropriate to enforce a removal order" against the individual, or if DHS deems release no longer appropriate.[120]

4. Release of Individuals with Final Orders of Removal and a Grant of Withholding or Deferral of Removal

Practitioners have increasingly reported that ICE continues to detain noncitizens granted withholding of removal or relief under the Convention Against Torture during and after the 90-day removal period, purportedly to find an alternative country for removal. However, according to the government's own data, ICE has deported only between 1.6 and 3.3 percent of noncitizens who are granted withholding of removal or CAT relief in recent years.[121] Since 2000, ICE's policy favors the prompt release of noncitizens granted withholding of removal or relief under the Convention Against Torture even during the 90-day removal period and even where DHS appeals the grant of relief.[122] The policy instructs ICE field offices to release noncitizens as soon as they are granted relief unless there are "exceptional circumstances" warranting continued detention. Practitioners with clients who have won withholding or relief under the Convention Against Torture may consider [118] Id. § 241.13(g)(1).

---

[119] See id. §§ 241.5(a), 241.4(j).

[120] Id. § 241.4(l)(2). The regulations provide procedures for "informal" review of the revocation and periodic review of the subsequent detention.

[121] CAIR Coalition, ACLU of Virginia, and National Immigration Project, Continued Detention of Noncitizens Who Win Immigration Relief (Feb. 2024), https://www.caircoalition.org/sites/default/files/documents/Continued%20Detention%20Policy%20Brief%20(1).pdf.

[122] See Message from Tae Johnson, ICE Acting Dir., REMINDER: Detention Policy Where an Immigration Judge has Granted Asylum, Withholding of Removal, or Convention Against Torture Protection, and DHS has Appealed (Jun. 7, 2021); Message from Gary Mead, ICE ERO Executive Assoc. Dir., Reminder on Detention Policy Where an Immigration Judge Has Granted Asylum, Withholding of Removal, or CAT (Mar. 6, 2012); Memorandum from Michael Garcia, ICE Ass't Sec'y, Detention Policy Where an Immigration Judge Has Granted Asylum and ICE Has Appealed (Feb. 9, 2004); Memorandum from Bo Cooper, INS General Counsel, Detention and Release During the Removal Period of Aliens Granted Withholding or Deferral of Removal (Apr. 21, 2000), all available at https://www.acluva.org/sites/default/files/field_documents/all_ice_policies_on_post-relief_release_2000-20211.pdf.

submitting a release request to ICE on their client's behalf and attaching the ICE policy, or may file a habeas petition as noted below.

5. Habeas Petitions

Due process prohibits the indefinite detention of individuals detained under INA § 241(a)(6). In Zadvydas v. Davis, the Supreme Court in 2001 held that there was an implicit reasonableness limitation on detention under § 241(a)(6) for those admitted to the United States and subsequently ordered removed, and that the presumptive reasonableness limit for post-removal period detention is six months.[123] In Clark v. Martinez, the Supreme Court in 2005 extended the holding of Zadvydas to persons deemed inadmissible.[124] However, in Johnson v. Arteaga-Martinez, the Supreme Court held in 2022 that section 241(a)(6) does not automatically require a bond hearing if an individual has been detained for six months.[125] As in Rodriguez, the Court remanded the case to analyze the respondent's constitutional claims.[126] Individuals wishing to challenge the prolonged nature of their detention can bring a habeas action in federal district court on purely constitutional grounds.[127]

Individuals who have a final grant of withholding or relief under the Convention Against Torture and who have no reasonable likelihood of removal to a third country may also file a habeas petition if ICE refuses to release them, especially after the 90-day removal period.[128]

---

[123] 533 U.S. 678 (2001).

[124] 543 U.S. 371 (2005).

[125] 596 U.S. 573 (2022).

[126] Id. at 583. Despite the Supreme Court's ruling in Arteaga-Martinez, a preliminary injunction issued in 2018 in Aleman-Gonzalez v. Sessions, No. 18-01869 (N.D. Cal. June 5, 2018), Doc. No. 33, remains in effect as of the date of this practice advisory's issuance. That preliminary injunction affords individuals in the Ninth Circuit detained under INA § 231(a)(6) who have live claims before EOIR or a circuit court (e.g. a pending motion to reopen or petition for review) the right to an IJ bond hearing after 180 days.

[127] Since the Court's decision in Arteaga-Martinez, some district courts have granted habeas petitions brought on constitutional grounds of individuals detained for prolonged periods of time under section 241(a)(6). Cabrera Galdamez v. Mayorkas, No. 22 CIV. 9847 (LGS), 2023 WL 1777310 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 6, 2023) (ordering a bond hearing or release of individual detained under section 241(a)(6) for sixteen months without a bond hearing); Henriquez v. Garland, No. 23-CV-01025-AMO, 2023 WL 6226374 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 25, 2023) (same for noncitizen detained under section 241(a)(6) for fourteen months without a bond hearing). See resources listed in note 51 supra.

[128] See ACLU of Virginia, Habeas Petitions Challenging ICE WAS Unlawful Detention Practices, https://www.acluva.org/en/cases/habeas-petitions-challenging-ice-was-unlawful-detention-practices. Practitioners considering a habeas action on behalf of a client with a grant of withholding or relief under the Convention Against Torture can reach out to the National Immigration Project for technical assistance on their case. NIPNLG, Technical Assistance, https://nipnlg.org/membership/technical-assistance.

E. Other Restrictions on Freedom – Alternatives to Detention and Orders of Supervision

Even where an individual is not physically detained initially, or is later released from immigration detention including after paying a bond, ICE may condition release on what are frequently called "alternatives to detention" (ATD).[129] These are restrictions on the person's freedom that, according to ICE's Detention Management summary, "exist to ensure compliance with release conditions and provide important case management services for non-detained noncitizens" and consider various factors for enrollment such as an individual's criminal, immigration, and supervision history; family and/or community ties; status as a caregiver or provider; and other humanitarian or medical considerations.[130] ATD consists of the Intensive Supervision Appearance Program (ISAP), which began in 2004.[131] Telephonic reporting, Global Positioning System (GPS) monitoring, and SmartLINK are the three types of technology that ICE uses under ISAP ATD.[132] Through telephone reporting, ICE uses voiceprints to verify the person's identity.[133] GPS monitoring relies on ankle-worn devices and tracks the person's location.[134] SmartLINK relies on face matching technology to monitor the person and it is an application that the person downloads onto their phone or, if the person does not have a phone, ICE will issue them a device that has the SmartLINK application.[135] The majority of people in the ATD program are assigned to the SmartLINK application. A 2022 GAO report noted that the number of people enrolled in ATD has increased exponentially, "from an average of less than 27,000 per day in fiscal year 2015 to an average of more than 90,000 per day at the end of fiscal year 2020."[136] According to ICE, the daily cost per ATD participant is less than $8 per day, which is much less than the cost of detention at around $150 per day.[137]

---

[129] GAO Report to Congressional Committees, Alternatives to Detention: ICE Needs to Better Assess Program Performance and Improve Contract Oversight, GAO-22-104529, at 8 (Jun. 2022), https://www.gao.gov/assets/d22104529.pdf (noting that the "ATD program serves as a supplemental requirement that may be added" when ICE "determines that an individual is not to be detained—including bond, order of recognizance, order of supervision, or on parole for urgent humanitarian reasons or significant public benefit") [hereinafter "2022 GAO ATD Report"]; GAO Report to Congressional Committees, Alternatives to Detention: Improved Data Collection and Analyses Needed to Better Assess Program Effectiveness, GAO-15-26, at 9 (Nov. 2014), www.gao.gov/assets/670/666911.pdf (noting that "ICE may require participation in the ATD program as a condition of the [noncitizen's] release during immigration proceedings, or upon receipt of the [noncitizen's] final order of removal or grant of voluntary departure") [hereinafter "2014 GAO ATD Report"]; see also Congressional Research Service, Immigration: Alternatives to Detention (ATD) Programs (July 8, 2019), https://fas.org/sgp/crs/homesec/R45804.pdf.

[130] ICE, Alternatives to Detention, https://www.ice.gov/features/atd (last updated Mar. 5, 2024).

[131] Id.

[132] Id.

[133] Id.

[134] Id.

[135] Id.

[136] 2022 GAO ATD Report, supra note 129, at 2.

[137] ICE, Alternatives to Detention, https://www.ice.gov/features/atd (last updated Mar. 5, 2024).

ERO officers decide at what point and in what circumstances an individual may be taken off of the ATD program. Reasons for "termination" from the ATD program include:

- The individual receives relief from removal
- The individual's removal case is terminated or administratively closed
- The individual is removed from the United States or voluntarily departs
- The individual is arrested by ICE for removal
- The individual is arrested by another law enforcement agency
- The individual "abscond[s]" or otherwise violates the ATD program conditions
- ICE officers place the individual on other conditions of release outside of ATD, and
- The "ICE officers determine the [noncitizen] is no longer required to participate."[138]

A comprehensive 2022 GAO report found that while "ICE has developed policies and procedures to guide the ATD program," it did not effectively monitor implementation of those policies by ERO field offices, it did not ensure that the ATD contractor meets standards, and it did not fully address whether the ATD program was meeting its goals.[139] For example, ICE's "2017 ATD Handbook and an ATD policy memo from March 2021 direct field officials to conduct supervision reviews beginning at enrollment and every 30 days thereafter."[140] However, the GAO noted that ICE field offices were not following this guidance and field offices varied significantly in terms of how frequently they conducted supervision reviews.[141]

An individual may ask the IJ to ameliorate the conditions imposed on their release, including requirements imposed by ICE through an ATD program. This must be done within seven days of release from physical confinement, through a motion to ameliorate the conditions of release filed in immigration court.[142] If more than seven days have elapsed, the IJ does not have jurisdiction over the request, and instead the individual could seek such relief via a request to ERO.[143]

---

[138] 2014 GAO ATD Report, supra note 129, at 11 & 23 n.51; see also 2022 GAO ATD Report, supra note 129, at 22.

[139] 2022 GAO ATD Report, supra note 129, at 27–57.

[140] Id. at 30.

[141] Id. at 30–33.

[142] See 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(1) ("If the [noncitizen] has been released from custody, an application for amelioration of the terms of release must be filed within 7 days of release."); Matter of Aguilar-Aquino, 24 I&N Dec. 747 (BIA 2009) (the regulation's reference to "custody" means "actual physical restraint or confinement within a given space"); Matter of Garcia-Garcia, 25 I&N Dec. 93 (BIA 2009) (concluding that the IJ had jurisdiction to review DHS's ISAP conditions where respondent filed an application to ameliorate conditions within 7 days of his release from custody).

[143] 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(2); Matter of Chew, 18 I&N Dec. 262, 263 (BIA 1982) ("We find nothing in the regulations that would preclude [a noncitizen] from reapplying to the District Director for modification of the conditions of his custody status after the immigration judge has been divested of jurisdiction by the lapse of seven days following the [noncitizen's]

Given ERO's discretion over who should be placed in the program and when an individual can be terminated from the program, a well-documented request presenting equities and hardships would be wise. Note also that ISAP contractors have historically refused to speak with an individual's legal representative. Instead, ISAP asks that the legal representative discuss any concerns with the ERO officer overseeing the individual's case.

1. Orders of Supervision

Orders of supervision are a form of supervised release from ICE custody, typically imposed on individuals who are subject to a final order of removal.[144] An individual released on an order of supervision is required to comply with certain conditions, such as periodic reporting, continued efforts to obtain a travel document, physical or mental examinations, obtaining advance approval for travel, and providing written change of address information.[145]

An individual may seek to reduce or ease the conditions of an order of supervision by making a request with ERO. For example, they might request to have no check-ins or less frequent check-ins. ERO may agree to less frequent check-ins, for example once per year, particularly in cases where the individual can show a long history of compliance. If the individual is subject to an order of removal, another way to end an order of supervision is to seek reopening of the underlying removal order—assuming there is a legal basis to do so—by filing a motion to reopen.[146] Some practitioners have also been successful in removing excessively restrictive conditions of release through filing a habeas petition.[147] release from custody. . . ."); see also Matter of Daryoush, 18 I&N Dec. 352, 353 (BIA 1982) (concluding that "in rendering a determination on an application for amelioration of the conditions of bond pursuant to 8 CFR § 242.2(b), the District Director must state the reasons for his decision").

---

[144] 8 CFR §§ 241.5(a); 241.4.

[145] 8 CFR § 241.5(a).

[146] For guidance on filing motions to reopen, see National Immigration Project and Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Post-Conviction Relief Motions to Reopen (June 2022), https://nipnlg.org/sites/default/files/2023-03/2022_24June-advisory-PCR-MTR.pdf; National Immigration Litigation Alliance and American Immigration Council, Basics of Motions to Reopen EOIR-Issued Removal Orders (Apr. 2022), https://www.americanimmigrationcouncil.org/sites/default/files/practice_advisory/the_basics_of_motions_to_reopen_eoir-issued_removal_orders_practice_advisory_0.pdf; Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc., Practice Advisory: Motions to Reopen for DACA Recipients with Removal Orders (Oct. 14, 2020), https://cliniclegal.org/resources/removal-proceedings/practice-advisory-motions-reopen-daca-recipients-removal-orders.

[147] See Wiley Rein, Wiley's Pro Bono Program Achieves 'Significant Result' on Behalf of Immigration Client (Dec. 13, 2023), https://www.wiley.law/pressrelease-Wileys-Pro-Bono-Program-Achieves-Significant-Result-on-Behalf-of-Immigration-Client. Practitioners considering this strategy can reach out to the National Immigration Project for technical assistance on their case. NIPNLG, Technical Assistance, https://nipnlg.org/membership/technical-assistance.

F. Chart: Immigration Detention and Remedies to Seek Release

The below chart provides a visual description of the various strategies for release from immigration detention discussed in section II.B. In several places, this guide has referenced arguments that could be made in federal district court habeas actions. As this chart illustrates, these arguments could also be raised before the IJ and on appeal to the BIA, even though the agency may conclude that it lacks authority to consider constitutional arguments or that its own precedent precludes the argument. It may still be wise to raise arguments before the agency for strategic reasons, including to comply with prudential exhaustion doctrine for those anticipating potential habeas litigation in federal court. A discussion of habeas and exhaustion doctrine is beyond the scope of this guide. Practitioners should research precedents governing their jurisdiction to determine the viability of potential arguments and there may be additional strategies available in specific jurisdictions.

Detention Classification	DHS Remedy?	Immigration Court Remedy?	Federal Court Remedy?
Arriving noncitizen (Strategies discussed in section II.B.3)	File parole request with ICE	If the individual was erroneously classified as an arriving noncitizen, seek IJ review of the determination	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention or challenging the legality of the process followed in making parole determinations
In removal proceedings – section 236(a) (Strategies discussed in section II.B.1)	Negotiate with ICE ERO for release on recognizance or low bond	Bond hearing	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention, asking for a new bond hearing where the government bears the burden of proof by clear and convincing evidence and where IJ must consider the respondent's ability to pay
In removal proceedings – section 236(c) (Strategies discussed in section II.B.2)	Seek discretionary release with ERO (unlikely to be granted unless serious and urgent medical issues are present)	Request Joseph hearing if there is a basis to challenge the section 236(c) classification	Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention, or based on other theories such as that those with a substantial challenge to removal are not subject to section 236(c)

Detention Classification	DHS Remedy?	Immigration Court Remedy?	Federal Court Remedy?
Final order of removal – section 241 (Strategies discussed in section II.B.4)	Seek release with ICE through regulatory process		Seek habeas relief if prolonged detention
Pending petition for review with a stay of removal (Strategies discussed in section II.B.4)	Seek release with ICE through regulatory process	Seek bond hearing arguing that detention falls under section 236(a), if jurisdiction's case law permits	Seek habeas relief arguing that the individual's detention is governed by section 236(a), or based on prolonged detention
Final order of removal and grant of withholding or relief under CAT (Strategies discussed in section II.B.4)	Seek release with ICE through ICE policy favoring release		Seek habeas relief based on prolonged and/or indefinite detention
Alternatives to detention (Strategies discussed in section II.B.5)	Request that ICE remove or ease conditions	File motion seeking amelioration of conditions within seven days of release from custody	Confer with experienced federal court litigators to determine whether there are viable federal court remedies

IV. Legal Framework and Procedural Rules in Immigration Court Bond Hearings

This section provides an overview of the legal framework and procedural rules governing immigration court bond hearings—also called custody redetermination hearings. As discussed above, individuals who are detained under INA § 236(a) are eligible to seek bond before the immigration court. Unfortunately, many noncitizens in removal proceedings are not eligible for an immigration court bond hearing because they are not detained under INA § 236(a); they must instead seek release through other means, such as through requests to ICE.

A. Authority to Set Bond

As discussed above, ICE has authority in the first instance to set bond for an individual detained under INA § 236(a).[148] Of course, just because ICE is permitted to set a bond does not mean that ICE will do so; the agency may instead choose to detain an individual without bond. Whether or not ICE sets an initial bond in the case of a person detained under § 236(a), the IJ has the authority to review ICE's custody determination through a bond hearing.[149]

B. How to Request a Bond Hearing

An individual must request a bond hearing with the immigration court; the IJ does not have authority to re-determine bond sua sponte.[150] An individual can request a custody redetermination orally at a master calendar hearing, in writing, or by telephone at the discretion of the IJ.[151] There is no filing fee for a bond motion.[152]

Practitioners should be aware that some individuals may have already requested an IJ review of ICE's custody determination by checking the appropriate box on Form I-286, "Notice of Custody Determination." Whether or not that will automatically trigger the scheduling of a bond hearing, however, will vary based on jurisdiction.

C. Where to File a Bond Hearing Request

Regulations direct that a respondent should generally file a request for a bond hearing with the immigration court with jurisdiction over the place of detention.[153] As discussed in sections II.B and II.C above, ICE determines the place of detention and can move a detained individual at any time.[154] If ICE transfers an individual to a different jurisdiction after the individual has requested a bond

---

[148] See 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(8), (d).

[149] 8 CFR §§ 1003.19(a), 236.1(d).

[150] Matter of P-C-M-, 20 I&N Dec. 432 (BIA 1991).

[151] 8 CFR § 1003.19(b); Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(c); see also Matter of Valles, 21 I&N Dec. 769, 771 (BIA 1997) ("In bond proceedings, [a noncitizen] remains free to request a bond redetermination at any time without a formal motion, without a fee, and without regard to filing deadlines, so long as the underlying deportation proceedings are not administratively final. In other words, no bond decision is final as long as the [noncitizen] remains subject to a bond.").

[152] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(c)(2).

[153] 8 CFR § 1003.19(c). These regulations are not jurisdictional. Matter of Cerda Reyes, 26 I&N Dec. 528, 530–31 (BIA 2015) (noting that "[a]lthough the regulations suggest that a bond hearing will usually be held in the location where the [noncitizen] is detained, policies related to the scheduling of bond hearings, including determining the location of the hearing, are properly within the province of the [Office of the Chief Immigration Judge]").

[154] See supra section II.A.3 (discussing ICE transfer policies).

hearing, practitioners can argue that the original immigration court may adjudicate the bond request, given that the regulations focus on the place of detention at the time of filing the custody redetermination motion.[155]

D. When a Bond Hearing Request Can Be Made

An individual can request an immigration court bond hearing as soon as they are taken into immigration detention; they need not wait until DHS files the NTA or until an initial hearing is scheduled.[156] However, the immigration court does not have jurisdiction over a bond request unless and until the individual is in immigration custody.[157] The Immigration Court Practice Manual notes that once a respondent requests a bond hearing, the court "schedules the hearing for the earliest possible date and notifies the [noncitizen] and [DHS]."[158] The amount of time between a bond redetermination request and the actual hearing will vary from court to court.

E. Representation During Bond Hearings

Individuals seeking bond may be represented at bond hearings.[159] A practitioner can enter their appearance in a bond hearing by filing Form EOIR-28, Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Immigration Court, with the immigration court and serving a copy on OPLA. A legal representative may enter an appearance solely for the bond proceeding by checking the box on Form EOIR-28 indicating that the appearance is for "custody and bond proceedings only."[160] Practitioners should also explain to the client if representation will be limited to the bond proceeding and the effect of this limited representation on the removal proceedings. Sometimes the bond hearing is conducted immediately before or after a respondent's master calendar hearing, which can cause confusion for the respondent.[161]

Practitioners should keep in mind that strategies in the bond proceeding may affect and can be closely tied to strategies in the underlying removal case. Practitioners should be careful about making concessions in the bond proceeding and avoid a strategy that could prejudice the client's underlying removal case. Practitioners should proceed with particular caution if they are not going

---

[155] 8 CFR § 1003.19(c)(1).

[156] See id. § 1003.14(a).

[157] Matter of Sanchez, 20 I&N Dec. 223 (BIA 1990); Matter of Lehder, 15 I&N Dec. 159 (BIA 1975).

[158] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(d) (noting also that "[i]n limited circumstances, an Immigration Judge may rule on a bond redetermination request without holding a hearing").

[159] See id. Ch. 9.3(e)(2) ("In a bond hearing, the [noncitizen] may be represented at no expense to the government.").

[160] 8 CFR § 1003.17(a). Form EOIR-28 is available at https://www.justice.gov/eoir/file/639746/dl?inline.

[161] Cf. Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(d).

to be representing the client in the underlying removal case but rather only in the bond proceeding.

F. Bond Record and Evidence

Bond hearings are "separate and apart from" removal proceedings.[162] This means that the record created in a bond proceeding is kept separate from the Record of Proceeding pertaining to the underlying removal proceedings.[163] Bond hearings are not always recorded, and individuals do not generally have a right to a transcript of the bond hearing.[164] Because bond proceedings are separate, a respondent wishing to have evidence from the bond proceeding included in the removal proceedings record should separately file that evidence in the removal proceeding. Likewise, a respondent wishing to have evidence in the removal case considered in the bond case should introduce that evidence into the bond record.[165] Even though the proceedings are separate, courts have ruled differently as to whether evidence presented or testimony given during a bond hearing may be considered in the removal proceeding.[166] DHS may seek to re-submit evidence presented in the bond proceedings during the removal proceedings, such as evidence related to criminal history that falls outside of the requirements governing what is part of the record of conviction.[167] In addition, as a practical matter, the same IJ usually handles bond and removal in a

---

[162] 8 CFR § 1003.19(d).

[163] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(4) ("The Immigration Judge creates a record, which is kept separate from the Records of Proceedings for other Immigration Court proceedings involving the [noncitizen].").

[164] Matter of Chirinos, 16 I&N Dec. 276, 277 (BIA 1977) (stating that "there is no right to a transcript of a bond redetermination hearing" nor any requirement of a "formal hearing" and that even a telephonic hearing may be permissible). The Ninth Circuit has held that in the context of bond hearings of individuals with pending petitions for review whose detention has been prolonged, due process requires that the immigration court make a contemporaneous record of the proceeding. Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1208–09 (9th Cir. 2011); see also Settlement Agreement, Hernandez v. Garland, No. 16-00620 at section III.B.10.i (C.D. Cal. filed Oct. 25, 2021), https://www.aclusocal.org/sites/default/files/field_documents/exh.dct_357-3_exhibit_a_-_settlement_agreement.pdf (requiring bond hearings pursuant to the settlement agreement to be recorded).

[165] See Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(5) ("Since the Record of Proceedings in a bond proceeding is kept separate and apart from other Records of Proceedings, documents already filed in removal proceedings must be resubmitted if the filing party wishes them to be considered in the bond proceeding."); Matter of Adeniji, 22 I&N Dec. 1102 (BIA 1999) ("[W]e consider it inappropriate to look to portions of the record in the merits appeal that were not referenced in or made part of the bond record.").

[166] Compare Joseph v. Holder, 600 F.3d 1235, 1240–43 (9th Cir. 2010) (finding the IJ erred in using her notes from respondent's testimony during bond hearing to make an adverse credibility determination during the subsequent removal hearing), with Zivkovic v. Holder, 724 F.3d 894, 911 (7th Cir. 2013) (holding the IJ can take into account relevant evidence that arises in bond proceedings for consideration in removal proceedings).

[167] See Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13 (2005) (describing what documents are part of the record of conviction). Practitioners should be vigilant any time DHS seeks to introduce evidence and should make timely and proper objections to preserve the record. See also Cevada Azizyan, A044 428 950 (BIA May 13, 2016) (unpublished), respondent's case, so if the IJ forms a strong impression of the respondent in the bond hearing, it may carry over into the removal case.

Regulations state that an IJ can consider "any information that is available to the Immigration Judge or that is presented to him or her by the [noncitizen] or the Service" in making a bond determination.[168] A leading BIA case on bond, Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37, 40–41 (BIA 2006), directs that any evidence that is "probative and specific" can be considered during the bond hearing. This can include evidence of pending criminal charges or other criminal records beyond conviction documents, such as criminal complaints.[169] As discussed in section V.A.5 below, practitioners should object if evidence offered by DHS is not probative or specific, such as in situations where it is unreliable, the source is not stated, or it contains inaccuracies.

Unless otherwise stated by the IJ, the usual document filing deadlines do not apply in bond proceedings.[170] However, practitioners should be mindful that filing documents sufficiently in advance will make it more likely that the IJ adequately reviews them before the hearing.[171]

G. Bond Amounts and Ability to Pay

By statute, the minimum bond that an IJ can set is $1,500.[172] There is no statutory maximum bond amount.

---

www.scribd.com/document/313685922/Cevada-Azizyan-A044-428-950-BIA-May-13-2016 (remanding after termination for further consideration of whether the respondent had been admitted, and directing that the IJ should consider whether the statements the respondent made during bond proceedings regarding his entry into the United States, which were submitted by DHS in the removal proceeding via a transcript, were inconsistent with testimony during the removal proceedings); E-A-A-M-, AXXX-XXX-461 (BIA May 10, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/380079140/E-A-A-M-AXXX-XXX-461-BIA-May-10-2018?secret_password=DWbdoOXLelwsOm4DbzKM (concluding that "nothing in the regulation provides that evidence in the bond file cannot be retrieved and offered separately during the merits case if admissible in both settings").

[168] 8 CFR § 1003.19(d). Citing this regulation, the Ninth Circuit concluded that it was proper for an unauthenticated Record of Arrests and Prosecutions (RAP) sheet to come into the bond record and that the authentication requirements found at 8 CFR § 287.6(a) do not apply in bond proceedings. Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1209–10 (9th Cir. 2011).

[169] Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. at 41 (finding appropriate IJ's consideration of complaint containing "specific and detailed" allegations related to pending drug trafficking charges, where it was signed by a Drug Enforcement Agency agent, described the source of the allegation that the respondent was involved in selling drugs, and "set[] forth the events leading to the respondent's arrest, including locations, alleged accomplices, and other details").

[170] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(5).

[171] The practitioner may also argue that the timely advanced filing gave the IJ and the OPLA attorney sufficient time to review the documents before the hearing.

[172] INA § 236(a)(2)(A).

The statute further provides that a noncitizen may be released on "conditional parole."[173] Thus, when an individual is detained under INA § 236(a), an IJ can do any of the following: set a bond where ICE has held the person without a bond, lower the bond set by ICE, or raise the bond set by ICE.[174] A 2023 report showed that the chances of a bond grant, and the amount of bond, varied significantly based on the respondent's nationality and the immigration court.[175] Additional data also indicates that whether a respondent is represented and/or faces gang affiliation allegations may affect the likelihood of being granted bond.[176]

In Hernandez v. Sessions, 872 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 2017), the Ninth Circuit held that IJs in bond proceedings must consider a respondent's ability to pay as well as their amenability to release on alternatives to detention. The court's ruling was grounded in the Fifth Amendment due process right, which "prohibits our government from discriminating against the poor in providing access to fundamental rights, including the freedom from physical restraints on individual liberty."[177] In that decision, the late Judge Stephen Reinhardt wrote, "While the temporary detention of non-citizens may sometimes be justified by concerns about public safety or flight risk, the government's discretion to incarcerate non-citizens is always constrained by the requirements of due process: no person may be imprisoned merely on account of his poverty."[178] While this ruling is only binding within the Ninth Circuit, practitioners throughout the country should consider arguing that as a matter of due process, IJs in bond proceedings must consider ability to pay and suitability for release on alternatives to detention, citing to the Hernandez decision as persuasive authority.[179]

---

[173] INA § 236(a)(2)(B). While some IJs have historically concluded that they lack authority to grant this type of release, DHS conceded in a class action lawsuit that IJs do have this authority. Rivera v. Holder, 307 F.R.D. 539 (W.D. Wash. 2015); see ACLU Immigrants' Rights Project, ACLU of Washington & Northwest Immigrant Rights Project, Practice Advisory: Immigration Judges' Authority to Grant Release on Conditional Parole Under INA § 236(a) as an Alternative to Release on a Monetary Bond (Sept. 2015), www.aclu.org/legal-document/rivera-v-holder-practice-advisory. Due to the district court's ruling in the Rivera litigation, IJs in the state of Washington must consider conditional parole in making custody redeterminations. Even though this ruling is not binding outside Washington state, practitioners can argue based on the statutory language that all IJs have the authority to grant, and should consider, conditional parole.

[174] See Matter of Spiliopoulos, 16 I&N Dec. 561, 562 (BIA 1978).

[175] See Transaction Records Access Clearinghouse, Detained Immigrants Seeking Release on Bond Have Widely Different Outcomes - Overall Bond Grant Rates Have Dropped (July 19, 2023), https://trac.syr.edu/reports/722/.

[176] See CLINIC Presumed Dangerous: Bond, Representation, and Detention in the Baltimore Immigration Court, at 2, 7 (Oct. 18, 2019), https://www.cliniclegal.org/resources/enforcement-and-detention/presumed-dangerous-bond-representation-and-detention-baltimore (finding that in observed bond hearings at the Baltimore Immigration Court, bond was set for represented respondents in 72 percent of cases and for unrepresented respondents in 48 percent of cases. The court denied bond in 88 percent of cases where the government alleged gang affiliation).

[177] 872 F.3d at 981.

[178] Id.

[179] See ACLU, Practice Advisory: Bond Hearings and Ability-to-Pay Determinations in the Ninth Circuit Under Hernandez v. Sessions (Dec. 2017), www.aclu.org/other/practice-advisory-bond-hearing-and-ability-pay-determinations (includes tips

Indeed, district courts in other jurisdictions have held that due process requires consideration of a respondent's ability to pay and alternatives to detention when setting bond under INA § 236(a).[180]

Additionally, respondents detained under 236(a) within the jurisdiction of the Central District of California may benefit from a five-year settlement agreement reached in 2021 in Hernandez v. Garland, which among other things prohibits IJs who have determined that a respondent does not pose a danger from setting a bond amount greater than what is necessary to ensure the respondent's appearance at future proceedings.[181]

H. Burden of Proof During Bond Hearings

While neither the statute nor the regulations explicitly address which party bears the burden of proof in immigration court bond hearings,[182] the BIA has repeatedly held that the respondent has the burden to prove eligibility for bond.[183] IJs will thus place the burden on the respondent pursuant to BIA precedent unless there is a contrary binding federal court ruling in the relevant jurisdiction.

Advocates have had some success in bringing constitutional challenges to the BIA's framework placing the burden of proof on the respondent. For example, in Brito v. Garland, the First Circuit concluded that in § 236(a) bond hearings "the government must either prove by clear and convincing evidence that the person is a danger to the community, or prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the person is a flight risk."[184] However, in Miranda v. Garland, the Fourth Circuit on making these arguments in bond hearings and sample pro se motions). Individuals unable to pay the bond amount set could also consider habeas relief in federal district court, arguing that the bond amount must take into account the individual's ability to pay.

---

[180] See, e.g., Onosamba-Ohindo v. Barr, 483 F. Supp. 3d 159 (W.D.N.Y. 2020), judgment vacated in part on other grounds, appeal dismissed sub nom. Agustin v. Searls, No. 20-3712, 2022 WL 15985214 (2d Cir. Aug. 26, 2022). District courts have recognized similar due process requirements in the context of INA § 236(c) prolonged detention habeas litigation. See, e.g., Constant v. Barr, 409 F. Supp. 3d 159, 172 (W.D.N.Y. 2019); Wilkins v. Doll, No. 1:17-CV-2354, 2018 WL 3388032, at *2 (M.D. Pa. July 12, 2018).

[181] Settlement Agreement, Hernandez v. Garland, No. 16-00620 at section III.B.10.i (C.D. Cal. filed Oct. 25, 2021), https://www.aclusocal.org/sites/default/files/field_documents/exh.dct_357-3_exhibit_a_-_settlement_agreement.pdf.

[182] The regulations discuss the burden of proof for DHS bond decisions, but not IJ bond decisions. 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(8) (stating that in the context of bond decisions made by DHS, "the [noncitizen] must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the officer that such release would not pose a danger to property or persons, and that the [noncitizen] is likely to appear for any future proceeding").

[183] See, e.g., Matter of R-A-V-P-, 27 I&N Dec. 803 (BIA 2020); Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018); Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37, 40 (BIA 2006); Matter of Drysdale, 20 I&N Dec. 815, 817 (BIA 1994).

[184] Brito v. Garland, 22 F.4th 240, 246 (1st Cir. 2021); see Franco-Gonzalez v. Holder, No. CV 10-02211 DMG DTBX, 2013 WL 3674492, at *13 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2013) (holding that Franco class members who are detained for longer than 180 days are entitled to a custody redetermination hearing where the government bears the burden to meet the clear and convincing evidence standard).

rejected a due process challenge to placing the burden of proof on the respondent in bond proceedings.[185] [186]

I. Legal Standard Governing Bond Hearings

Under prevailing BIA case law, to win release on bond the respondent must establish that they are not a danger to the community nor a flight risk.[187] In the 1976 case Matter of Patel, the BIA stated that "[a noncitizen] generally is not and should not be detained or required to post bond except on a finding that he is a threat to the national security . . . or that he is a poor bail risk."[188] Through subsequent decisions, the BIA has established that the respondent must show that "he or she does not present a danger to persons or property, is not a threat to the national security, and does not pose a risk of flight."[189] In Matter of Guerra, the BIA stated that "[a noncitizen] who presents a danger to persons or property should not be released during the pendency of removal proceedings."[190] In other words, the IJ should not set any bond if the respondent poses a danger to the community.[191] Only if the IJ concludes that the respondent does not pose a danger does the IJ reach the question of flight risk.[192]

---

[185] Miranda v. Garland, 34 F.4th 338, 366 (4th Cir. 2022); see also Rodriguez Diaz v. Garland, 53 F.4th 1189, 1212 (9th Cir. 2022) ("Nothing in this record suggests that placing the burden of proof on the government was constitutionally necessary to minimize the risk of error, much less that such burden-shifting would be constitutionally necessary in all, most, or many cases."); Borbot v. Warden Hudson Cnty. Corr. Facility, 906 F.3d 274, 279 (3d Cir. 2018) (perceiving "no problem" that in section 236(a) bond proceedings "the burden remains on the detainee at all times").

[186] A number of other federal courts have held that where bond hearings become required due to the length of detention, due process places the burden of proof on the government to establish by clear and convincing evidence that continued detention is justified. See cases cited at note 49 supra.

[187] In the past, the government has sometimes denied bond for the purpose of deterring mass migration. After the ACLU filed a class action lawsuit challenging the government's policy of denying bond to families based on a general deterrence rationale rather than considering individualized circumstances, in 2015 the government issued a policy stating that it would no longer consider general deterrence in making detention decisions for families. ACLU, RILR v. Johnson, www.aclu.org/cases/rilr-v-johnson (updated July 31, 2015).

[188] 15 I&N Dec. 666, 666 (BIA 1976).

[189] Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37, 38 (BIA 2006).

[190] Id.

[191] Matter of Urena, 25 I&N Dec. 140, 141 (BIA 2009) ("Dangerous [noncitizens] are properly detained without bond."); see also Matter of Fatahi, 26 I&N Dec. 791, 795 (BIA 2016) (concluding, in a case that apparently implicated national security concerns, that the IJ can consider circumstantial evidence of dangerousness in addition to "proof of specific acts of past violence or direct evidence of an inclination toward violence" and upholding IJ decision not to set a bond because the respondent had made misrepresentations about his use of a fraudulent passport).

[192] Urena, 25 I&N Dec. at 141–42; see flight risk discussion infra.

Guerra lists a number of factors that the IJ can consider in making a bond determination, and states that IJs have "broad discretion" in considering what factors apply and how to weigh them.[193] Relevant factors include:

(1) "whether the [noncitizen] has a fixed address in the United States;
(2) the [noncitizen's] length of residence in the United States;
(3) the [noncitizen's] family ties in the United States, and whether they may entitle the [noncitizen] to reside permanently in the United States in the future;
(4) the [noncitizen's] employment history;
(5) the [noncitizen's] record of appearance in court;
(6) the [noncitizen's] criminal record, including the extensiveness of criminal activity, the recency of such activity, and the seriousness of the offenses;[194]
(7) the [noncitizen's] history of immigration violations;
(8) any attempts by the [noncitizen] to flee prosecution or otherwise escape from authorities; and
(9) the [noncitizen's] manner of entry into the United States."[195]

The BIA has noted that a number of above-listed Guerra factors, such as family and community ties, possibility of discretionary relief, fixed address, long residence in the United States, and employment history, are relevant to flight risk rather than dangerousness.[196]

1. Dangerousness and DUIs

In Siniauskas, the respondent had a recent arrest for driving under the influence (DUI) as well as three DUI convictions from over a decade ago. He had presented evidence and argument to show rehabilitation and that he was not a danger to the community. The BIA, reasoning that "family and community ties generally do not mitigate [a noncitizen's] dangerousness,"[197] ordered that the respondent be detained without any bond, finding that he had failed to meet his burden of proving he was not a danger to the community. In concluding that the evidence of family and community ties did not mitigate dangerousness, the BIA reasoned that the respondent "ha[d] not shown how his family circumstances would mitigate his history of drinking and driving, except to explain that the most recent incident occurred on the anniversary of his mother's death."[198]

---

[193] Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. at 40.

[194] BIA case law allows the IJ to consider evidence of pending charges or arrests where no charges or convictions have resulted. See, e.g., Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 208–09.

[195] Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. at 40.

[196] Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 209.

[197] Id. at 210.

[198] Id.

Practitioners with detained clients who have DUI arrests or convictions should attempt to distinguish Siniauskas, reminding the IJ that the bond analysis requires an individualized determination. Some features of Mr. Siniauskas's case that could be distinguished include:

- There were multiple DUIs (three convictions and a fourth arrest)[199]
- Three of the four incidents, including the recent one, involved accidents
- There was a recent DUI arrest, "undercut[ting] [the respondent's] argument that he has established rehabilitation and does not pose a danger to the community"[200]
- The respondent did not appear to dispute the veracity of the allegations underlying the pending charge, and
- The factors that the respondent presented as mitigation or to negate dangerousness existed before the recent arrest and had not prevented it.

In unpublished cases involving DUI history decided after Siniauskas, the BIA has concluded that the respondent established lack of dangerousness where the following factors were present: the respondent had a single DUI, there was no injury to property or persons, the state court did not impose jail time, there was no conviction and the respondent disputed the charges, the respondent showed post-arrest rehabilitation, and the respondent showed strong family ties and other positive equities.[201]

2. Flight Risk

Under prevailing BIA case law, the IJ should not consider flight risk unless they first determine that the respondent "would not pose a danger to property or persons."[202] Unlike the dangerousness determination, an IJ can conclude that the respondent poses some level of flight risk and still set a

---

[199] See id. ("This is not a case involving a single conviction for driving under the influence from 10 years ago.").

[200] Id. at 209.

[201] See, e.g., G-C-S-, AXXX XXX 032 (Apr. 30, 2019) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/411263889/G-C-S-AXXX-XXX-032-BIA-April-30-2019?secret_password=eTraAK424dAyuxdsQ6TS (single recent arrest with no conviction yet, no injury to property or persons, close family and community ties); J-S-R-, AXXX XXX 568 (BIA May 25, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/382794056/J-S-R-AXXX-XXX-568-BIA-May-25-2018?secret_password=uAfM8e7hzu613kEk1MHo ("[W]e agree with the Immigration Judge that the respondent's over 17 year residence in the United States, strong family ties, support of her 3 minor United States citizen children, longstanding employment as a daycare worker dedicated to providing young children, and commitment to rehabilitation from alcohol abuse, support the finding that she does not pose a danger to the community."); S-H-H-, AXXX XXX 293 (BIA Apr. 27. 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/380078090/S-H-H-AXXX-XXX-293-BIA-April-27-2018?secret_password=jLvrLzq9SrvoHbuaqrB0 (single DUI conviction in 15 years).

[202] Urena, 25 I&N Dec. at 141–42; accord Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 210.

bond to ensure appearance at future hearings.[203] Since "[t]he purpose of the bond is to ensure the respondent's presence at future proceedings," the IJ may set an amount of bond that varies "according to his assessment of the amount needed to motivate the respondent to appear in light of the considerations deemed relevant to bond determinations."[204] In Matter of Drysdale, for example, the BIA affirmed a $20,000 bond based on the fact that the respondent had "left his parental home and moved to another area, committed a serious drug trafficking crime soon after entering the United States, and was ineligible for any form of relief from deportation," and had an administratively final order of removal.[205] Sometimes the issue of flight risk overlaps with dangerousness. For example, the IJ may consider a respondent's criminal record as relevant to a flight risk determination (in addition to its more obvious relevance to dangerousness), to the extent that it may affect the respondent's eligibility for immigration relief.[206]

In a 2020 decision, Matter of R-A-V-P-, the BIA affirmed the IJ's denial of bond due to flight risk concerns where the respondent had recently arrived in the country, had "minimal ties to the United States," and had a "limited avenue for relief" in the form of his pending asylum application.[207] Additionally, although the respondent presented evidence of a fixed address and a sponsor willing to support him upon his release from detention, the BIA found such evidence "insufficient" to assuage flight risk concerns where there was "a lack of independent evidence establishing [the sponsor's] immigration status, as well as his ability to support the respondent" and no information "regarding how [the sponsor] knows the respondent or the nature of their relationship."[208] And while the respondent argued that his pending asylum application mitigated against flight concerns, the BIA noted that "eligibility for asylum can be difficult to establish, and an Immigration Judge may [203] See Matter of Drysdale, 20 I&N Dec. 815, 818 (BIA 1994) (noting that "[u]nlike the standard for determining if there is a danger to the community, [the flight risk determination] allows for flexibility"); see, e.g., [Respondent Name Redacted] (BIA Aug. 7, 2014) (unpublished), AILA Doc. No. 14100846, www.aila.org/infonet (agreeing with IJ that respondent was a flight risk given lack of employment record, no property ownership, and employment of a smuggler to gain entry to the United States, but ordering release on $5,000 bond because "evidence of a fixed address where she will reside, significant family ties in this country, and her claim of relief from removal provide some incentive for her to appear for future immigration proceedings").

---

[204] Drysdale, 20 I&N Dec. at 818. Note that the Drysdale case was decided in 1994, before current statutory provisions governing mandatory detention were enacted.

[205] Id.

[206] In Matter of Andrade, the BIA overruled the IJ's decision to release the respondent on his own recognizance and set a $10,000 bond, reasoning that the respondent's criminal history "negatively affects the discretionary grant" of relief for which he was statutorily eligible, "thereby giving him less motivation to appear at his deportation hearing." 19 I&N 488, 491 (BIA 1987).

[207] 27 I&N Dec. 803, 805–07 (BIA 2020).

[208] Id. at 806.

consider [a noncitizen's] circumstances in determining how likely it is that his application for relief will ultimately be approved."[209]

Since Matter of R-A-V-P- was issued, unpublished BIA cases have demonstrated the limits of the BIA's holding there. For example, in one case, the BIA remanded the IJ's prior bond denial where the respondent had, in contrast to Matter of R-A-V-P-, filed evidence of lawfully present family members willing and able to sponsor him.[210] Similarly, in another unpublished opinion, the BIA ordered the respondent released on a $3,000 bond, explaining that Matter of R-A-V-P- was distinguishable where the respondent had presented evidence of a U.S. citizen family member willing to sponsor and support him and where the IJ "did not consider the respondent's favorable credible fear interview."[211]

While these cases indicate that a documented sponsor is one strong basis for distinguishing Matter of R-A-V-P, practitioners may want to consider other possible grounds for doing so, such as:

- Submitting evidence of a sponsor's financial background and ability to support the respondent upon release, such as pay stubs, tax returns, letters from employers, proof of property ownership, etc.
- Including explicit plans in a sponsor's support letter for how the respondent will get to and from court hearings
- Documenting the depth of a respondent's relationship to the sponsor
- Having the sponsor appear at the bond hearing where safe and feasible, and
- Filing supporting evidence regarding the viability/strength of the respondent's underlying form of relief.

---

[209] Id.

[210] A-G-T-, AXXX XXX 483 (BIA May 19, 2020) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/466551930/A-G-T-AXXX-XXX-483-BIA-May-19-2020?secret_password=gD0Ihr85ourW1WajtYoP.

[211] A-A-F-, AXXX XXX 282 (BIA June 16, 2020) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/470811904/A-A-F-AXXX-XXX-282-BIA-June-16-2020?secret_password=U259bmergrnYQmpC5g1D.

V. Nuts and Bolts of Bond Proceedings

This section provides practical tips for effective preparation for and representation of clients during a bond hearing. Part A of this section discusses preparation, including working with the detained client, gathering and developing evidence, and submitting documents to the immigration court. Part B provides tips for the bond hearing itself. Part C covers post bond hearing considerations.

A. Bond Hearing Preparation

Adequate preparation in advance of a bond hearing is critical. While it is possible to go forward with a bond hearing with minimal or no preparation and receive a favorable result, respondents must be advised that the IJ will only conduct one custody redetermination hearing, unless the individual can demonstrate that circumstances have changed materially since the prior hearing.[212] Therefore, the first bond hearing may be the respondent's only opportunity to obtain a low bond amount.

The BIA takes the position that it is the respondent's burden to prove that they are not dangerous and their release does not present a flight risk.[213] Preparation and submission of documents may be key for winning bond before the IJ, particularly for individuals with any criminal history. Moreover, the IJ has authority to raise the bond or set no bond in addition to lowering it, providing all the more reason for adequate preparation. Finally, if an appeal to the BIA is necessary, having a well-developed record, including written documentation, may improve the chances of success on appeal. For these reasons, it may be wise for the respondent to seek a continuance at their initial appearance in immigration court, rather than going forward with a bond hearing that day, in order to prepare adequately.[214] In the alternative, the respondent may wish to withdraw the request for a bond hearing without prejudice and subsequently file a motion requesting one when they are ready to proceed.

An important component of preparation is conducting an analysis of likely and possible outcomes of seeking a custody redetermination. Knowing the audience (the particular IJ's practices, as well as the local OPLA office's position) is crucial to properly advise a client about the risks and benefits of seeking a bond redetermination. In some cases, there may be a high risk that seeking bond

---

[212] See 8 CFR § 1003.19(e). For more information, see section V.C.6 infra discussing the standards for second or successive bond hearings.

[213] See discussion at section III.A supra for a description of how federal courts have ruled on this issue.

[214] If the IJ is hesitant to grant a continuance, respondents and practitioners could note that continuing the bond case does not delay the removal proceeding and should be prepared to articulate why a continuance is warranted under the good cause standard.

redetermination will cause the IJ to raise the bond, and the client may make an informed decision not to request bond redetermination at a particular time. In any event, it will be important to find out from the client what amount the family can afford and how the bond money will be raised by the family or community. Practitioners should compare that amount with what is a realistic bond amount that the IJ might set, and be prepared to ask for a specific bond amount during the hearing. Ideally, a client wishing to proceed with a bond redetermination hearing will have a plan in place as to which trustworthy person known as the obligor can actually pay the bond and how the money will be collected, although this is not a reason to delay the bond hearing.[215]

1. Working with Detained Clients

Working with detained clients involves a variety of challenges beyond those present in all removal defense work. As noted in the introduction to this guide, detained respondents have their cases heard on an expedited docket, meaning there is less time to prepare the case. Representative-client communication is more challenging, and in-person visits require travel and advanced planning. It is more difficult for the detained client to assist the representative in preparing the case, since they lack the ability to freely gather documents and cannot attend meetings at the representative's office. Given these challenges, it is all the more important that practitioners representing detained clients do so with careful planning and organization that maximizes detention visits and preparation time.

Locating a Detained Client

If a client is detained in immigration custody but their location is unknown, the practitioner can search for the client using the ICE Online Detainee Locator System.[216] This online tool allows a search either using the subject's "alien registration number" (also known as an "A" number) and country of birth, or by first and last name and country of birth. It has English, Spanish, French, Portuguese, Russian, Somali, Vietnamese, Arabic, and Chinese options. If the practitioner does not have a required piece of information or the individual is not showing up in the online system (which is not uncommon due to lags or transfers), the practitioner can contact the local ERO office, provide a Form G-28, and ask about the detained individual's location.[217] Practitioners may also be able to [215] Identifying a trustworthy individual is important because often that person is paying the bond but the money comes from other sources, such as the client's family, who want the money returned to them when the bond is cancelled. For information on who can pay a bond, see section V.C.1 infra.

[216] The detainee locator tool is found on the ICE website, locator.ice.gov/odls/#/index (last visited Mar. 19, 2024).
[217] A list of ICE ERO field offices can be found on the ICE website, www.ice.gov/contact/ero (last updated Mar. 12, 2024).

search online jail rosters of the detention facilities with immigration beds in their area. Family members are often the best source in timely locating a detained individual.

Communicating with a Detained Client

Telephone communication procedures at detention centers vary. Practitioners should contact the detention center where the client is detained to find out procedures for legal representative calls. For example, it may be possible to get on the detention center's legal representative call list such that clients can make direct calls to the law office free of charge. It may be wise to establish a communication protocol with the detained client, such as having a particular day and time every week during which the client will call the practitioner. Practitioners should take care in terms of the substance of phone conversations, given that jail phone calls are typically recorded and their contents may be turned over to the police or prosecutor. Practitioners should inquire about steps that need to be taken to ensure that representative/client calls are confidential and not recorded, and their contents viewed as privileged. Even if the calls are not recorded, practitioners should be aware that jail guards or other detained individuals may be within earshot of the client.

ICE has also implemented Virtual Attorney Visitation (VAV) in some detention centers, which allows practitioners to use a video-based platform such as Cisco or WebEx to communicate with a client. These video visits are free and can be scheduled in advance. They are also meant to be confidential.[218]

For written correspondence, attorneys should label all mail sent to a detained individual as "Legal Mail."[219]

In-Person Visits

Practitioners should learn the legal visitation procedures governing the particular detention center, including visitation hours, what documents the practitioner must bring to the visit (such as forms of identification or proof of attorney license), what materials are prohibited, and whether the practitioner must complete a pre-clearance process before arriving at the facility. Practitioners may obtain this information by contacting the detention center. It is also helpful to speak with other practitioners who have recent experience with visits at the facility to learn more about best practices. If the facility is served by an LOP,[220] the LOP staff would be a good source for this information.

[218] More information about VAV and a list of the participating detention centers can be found on the ICE website, https://www.ice.gov/detain/detention-facilities/vav (last updated Mar. 19, 2024).

[219] See also ICE, Attorney Information and Resources (updated Feb. 28, 2024), https://www.ice.gov/detain/attorney-information-resources (providing information on attorney communication with clients in ICE detention).

Given the logistical challenges of visiting detained clients, practitioners should prepare carefully in advance to make the most of each visit. This will include bringing any documents that require the client's signature, such as medical and non-medical releases, retainer agreement, records request forms to obtain immigration and criminal records, Form G-28, etc. In order to gain as much pertinent information as possible, it is also helpful to prepare a detailed checklist or outline covering the various questions and topics the practitioner needs to discuss with the detained client. Practitioners may wish to develop a detained client intake tool or screening questionnaire for use in such cases.

In addition to gathering initial facts and executing release forms from the client, another important aspect of the meeting will be to ask the client about other points of contact that might help in developing supporting information. In the bond context, this would include individuals who may be able to write a declaration in support of the client's release on bond, who have documents pertinent to the bond proceeding, or who may be willing to testify on behalf of the client at a bond hearing. Of course, any time a practitioner wishes to contact a third party or share information related to a client's case, it is important to obtain the client's permission. This is best done through a written release form. It is also wise to find out if there is any particular information the client does not want shared with a third party. For example, a client may not want individuals to know about their criminal history. However, it is best practice that individuals who will be submitting a supporting declaration or testifying during the bond hearing know the client's background, including negative aspects, so that their declaration will be given full evidentiary weight and they are not taken by surprise during cross examination. These discussions with the client will help inform whom the practitioner can and should contact.

As with any client representation, it is important from the outset to establish clear expectations and promote the client's informed decision-making. For example, if the practitioner's representation of the client is limited to the bond hearing, it is crucial that the client understand and consent to this limited scope representation. The client should understand the mechanics of a bond hearing and the removal proceedings, which allow the IJ to switch from one proceeding to the other. In a limited representation agreement, the practitioner will represent the client only during bond proceedings, which may cause confusion when the IJ turns to the removal proceedings and asks the client if they want additional time to find legal representation. The practitioner will want to explain to the client why the IJ is asking the question regarding additional time to find representation for the removal proceedings, and that the answer to the IJ's question regarding a continuance should be "yes." In cases where practitioners are providing bond representation but the client is proceeding pro se in removal proceedings, it is particularly important to be aware of the pace at which both aspects of the proceedings are advancing and note that the IJ may not grant more than one continuance before requiring the client to identify possible forms of relief.

[220] EOIR, Legal Orientation Program, www.justice.gov/eoir/legal-orientation-program (last updated Jan. 6, 2023).

It is wise to review and sign a written representation agreement with the detained client and discuss it thoroughly. The representation agreement should specify the scope of the representation, including whether or not the agreement includes representation in the event of appeal. Practitioners should also provide the client with an approximate timeline for the case's progress. They should give the client the various possible and likely outcomes (release, IJ setting a bond the client cannot pay, no bond, etc.) that could result from the bond hearing. If the client wishes to go forward with the bond hearing, it is important beforehand to discuss what the client wants to do if the hearing result is not favorable and to identify the circumstances in which the client may want to reserve appeal.

If the practitioner has not had experiences with cases containing similar facts or is new to a particular jurisdiction, they may wish to reach out to other practitioners who have recently handled bond hearings before the same IJ with similar facts. In order to maximize the client's ability to participate in the representation and assist with the case, practitioners should ensure that the client understands the legal standards and burden of proof in the bond context.[221] When counseling a client about bond prospects, it is important to keep in mind that detained respondents may have an inaccurate understanding about bond practices based on what they hear from other detained individuals. Practitioners should remind clients that each case is different and that what happened to one person may be very different than what happens in the client's case.

2. Records Gathering and Fact Development

Gathering and reviewing pertinent records, and developing favorable evidence in support of a client's release on bond, are crucial for successful bond hearing preparation. Practitioners should think about records that already exist, and also about what evidence could be developed to strengthen the case. With respect to the former category, obtaining a document for review is different than deciding whether or not to submit the document. Practitioners should always carefully review all possible evidence to decide whether it is helpful or harmful to the client's case.

[221] See supra section IV.H-I.

Obtaining Existing Records

Given the IJ's wide discretion in the bond context and the non-exclusive list of bond factors,[222] practitioners should think creatively about what records exist that could bear on the IJ's bond decision—both those that would support release and those that might be viewed as negative.

Examples of positive records that should be gathered if they already exist include:

- Certificates of completion of any programming, such as for alcohol or substance abuse classes
- Documentation of mental health counseling or efforts to address other issues contributing to criminal activity
- Lease, mortgage, or other documentation showing the client's fixed address, length of residence in the United States, and that the client has a place to live if released
- Birth certificates, marriage certificate, and other citizenship/immigration documentation showing the client's family ties, particularly where the family member has U.S. citizenship or lawful immigration status
- Records showing that the client has paid taxes in the United States[223]
- Employment records showing a steady employment history
- Documentation, if any, establishing the client's potential immigration relief, such as the birth certificate of a qualifying relative for a non-LPR cancellation of removal application or a receipt notice showing that the client has a pending application for immigration relief with USCIS
- School or educational records, including transcripts, a diploma, or a GED, showing the client's participation in or completion of educational programs
- Documents showing the client's community involvement or recognition, such as volunteer certificates or awards
- Documentation showing the client's charitable contributions
- Documentation showing that the client has registered for the Selective Service
- Photos with family or community members who have lawful immigration status
- Documentation showing any medical conditions of the client or family members. Practitioners should consider filing medical records requests with the detention facility (with a signed authorization for release of information) to support any arguments about the client's health, and [222] See supra section IV.I.

---

[223] Practitioners should carefully review tax documents before submission to ensure that the client properly filed the taxes and that there were no misrepresentations or other problematic issues, such as the use of an alias that might raise questions from DHS.

- If relevant, records showing that the client showed up to past court appearances.

Examples of negative documents that should be gathered if they already exist include:

- The client's criminal record, including any arrest or police reports, criminal complaints, and conviction records. It is best practice to review the complete criminal record and not simply those law enforcement encounters that led to a conviction, because DHS will likely argue (and the BIA has held) that arrests and pending charges are relevant to the client's dangerousness
- The client's immigration history, such as documentation of prior immigration violations or misrepresentation. This will include any record of unlawful entry into the United States
- Any evidence suggesting that the client has attempted to flee prosecution or escape from authorities in the past, including bench warrants issued for failure to appear at criminal court proceedings
- Allegations by DHS of criminal history in the client's home country or of gang ties, and
- Any evidence of a transient lifestyle or lack of community ties.

The negative records are important to review because DHS could obtain and introduce them as evidence, and the practitioner will want to have a mitigation strategy for how to deal with such records, including any necessary objections.[224] For example, in some jurisdictions, DHS frequently files RAP sheets, which are not proof of convictions and should be objected to where they are unreliable or harmful.[225] These types of negative allegations will also frequently be found on Form I-213. Additionally, an IJ may request certain criminal records such as a complaint/charging document. In jurisdictions where it is the respondent's burden to prove bond eligibility, it may be in their interest to provide those records. However, practitioners should consider whether filing criminal records in bond proceedings could later be used against the client in removal proceedings where, for example, DHS has the burden of establishing deportability. Whether or not the IJ requests any particular record or the practitioner decides to submit any particular evidence, it is important to proactively review all records in order to provide accurate information to the court about the client's criminal history.

---

[224] For mitigation ideas, see section V.A.5 infra.

[225] Cf. Francis v. Gonzales, 442 F.3d 131, 143 (2d Cir. 2006) (stating, in removal proceedings context, that "[r]ap sheets lack the necessary information to describe the full record of conviction and do not necessarily emanate from a neutral, reliable source.").

Developing New Evidence Supporting Release on Bond[226]

In developing bond evidence, practitioners should remember that they are not limited by what records already exist; often the best bond evidence is developed in the course of preparation for the bond hearing. This requires creativity and persistence on the part of the practitioner. In thinking about what evidence could be developed, practitioners should go through the bond factors and consider what types of evidence could be presented to establish each factor.[227] For example, in establishing that the client's release would not pose a danger to the community, consider what documentation could be developed to support such a finding. This might include letters of support from rehabilitation programs, evidence that the client's criminal record did not involve harm to persons or property, or evidence that many years have passed since any unlawful conduct.

Examples of evidence supporting release that could be developed include:

- Declarations or letters of support attesting to the client's good character and responsible nature from family members, friends, co-workers, neighbors, clergy, and other community members
- Declarations or letters of support from school staff if the client or the client's child is in school
- Declaration or letter of support from the client's employer, if the client has valid work authorization
- Declarations, letters, or program information from social workers or organizations that have or can accept the client into drug/alcohol rehabilitation programs, domestic violence/anger management class, job training, etc.
- Psychological evaluations or proof that the client has been or will be attending therapy or a support group upon release, and
- If the client lacks a sponsor and may be deemed a flight risk or if they require some type of rehabilitation (such as for substance abuse or anger issues resulting in domestic violence incidents), evidence of a fully developed post-release plan. The plan should articulate the client's intended next steps once released from detention and address issues such as transportation, housing, and treatment programs. Documentation of what the release plan would be if the person needs programmatic support may include a printout of the local Alcoholics Anonymous schedule, acceptance into a residential [226] For more ideas about bond hearing evidence, see, for example, Maria Baldini-Potermin, Immigration Trial Handbook §§ 4:22–34 (2019 ed.); Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Removal Defense: Defending Immigrants in Immigration Court Ch. 6 (3rd ed. 2020); Adilene Nunez, A Practitioner's Guide to Bond Issues, 17-02 Immigr. Briefings 1 (Feb. 2017).

[227] For a summary of factors that IJs consider in bond hearings, see section IV.I supra.

treatment program, or evidence of the individual's transportation plan if they cannot legally drive.

Practice Tip on Developing an Effective Declaration

An effective declaration or letter submitted on behalf of a detained client seeking bond should state who the declarant is and how they know the respondent. It should provide specific details supporting the respondent's release on bond. The declarant should be asked to include a phone number and should be warned of the unlikely possibility that DHS (or the IJ during the hearing) could call them to verify the information. It is best that only individuals who have lawful immigration status in the United States, preferably U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents, submit documents in immigration court or appear at court in support of a respondent. If the declarant asks the representative about the risks or consequences of submitting a declaration or letter or of coming to court, the representative might have a conflict of interest and may need to recommend that the person seek independent advice. Organizations may be able to establish informal cross-referrals, whereby one nonprofit agency represents the declarant while another represents the detained individual.

In some situations, such as where the declarant is illiterate, it may be most effective for the practitioner to draft the declaration based on a conversation with the individual. In other situations, it may be preferable to have the declarant prepare the first draft and then the practitioner can edit or polish it. In such situations, practitioners should give the declarant specific suggestions about the content, organization, and format to follow.

An effective declaration or letter should contain sufficient detail and describe how the declarant knows that the respondent is neither a flight risk nor is dangerous. This will require, where the respondent has a criminal history, that the declarant indicate their knowledge of the criminal history. For example, it could include words to the effect that "I have been informed that [name] was arrested by ICE because of pending charges for [X]." Where true, it can be helpful to include details, such as that a neighbor has had the respondent babysit for their children despite knowing of the respondent's past arrest for a DUI, or that a family member has pledged to provide transportation (for a respondent who cannot drive, or is prohibited from driving), housing, or other support.

All declarations must follow the Immigration Court Practice Manual. The document should include language such as: "I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge," followed by the date, signature, and printed name of the person signing. Practitioners are encouraged to attach a copy of the declarant's government-issued identification.

They should also follow the Practice Manual's directions on foreign language translations. If a document is in a language other than English, it must be accompanied by an English translation along with a certificate of translation.[228] The certificate of translation must be signed by the translator who states that they are fluent in both languages, and that the translation is true and accurate to the best of their knowledge and abilities.[229]

Finally, it is prudent to ensure that there are no inconsistencies between the declaration and other evidence prepared for filing (examples of common inconsistencies include declarants referencing different dates for a client's arrival in the country or community, referring to a client by a different name or nickname, etc.).

3. Submitting Documents in Advance of the Bond Hearing

When preparing and submitting documents to the immigration court, it is important to review and follow the Immigration Court Practice Manual. Note that there is a chapter devoted to bond proceedings, as well as other sections that discuss immigration court filings and provide sample documents. In addition, practitioners can reach out to experienced local practitioners who may have further insight on any preferences or practices of the particular immigration court or IJ. The practitioner may also be able to contact the immigration court administrator when procedural questions arise.[230]

Preparing and Filing a Motion for a Bond Redetermination

Timing. An individual detained in immigration custody may request that a bond hearing be set even if the NTA has not yet been filed.[231] Some detained respondents may not be automatically scheduled for a bond hearing because they did not know to ask for a custody redetermination. Once the immigration court receives a bond hearing request, it should schedule a bond hearing "for the earliest possible date."[232] However, in some jurisdictions the initial bond hearing is scheduled concurrently with the first master calendar hearing. Given the volume of cases and court backlogs, this could be weeks or more after the person is detained.

---

[228] See Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 3.3(a) & Appendix G (Sample Certificate of Translation).

[229] See id. Ch. 3.3(a).

[230] A list of immigration courts with contact information including phone numbers is available on the EOIR website. EOIR, Find an Immigration Court and Access Internet-Based Hearings, www.justice.gov/eoir/eoir-immigration-court-listing (updated Mar. 27, 2024).

[231] See supra section IV.D.

[232] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(d).

Contents of a Request for Bond Redetermination. The request for a bond redetermination should include the individual's full name and "A" number, the facility where the individual is detained, and the bond amount set by ICE, if any.[233] It is also helpful to note the detained client's primary language. If this is the practitioner's first appearance in the case, they should also file Form EOIR-28, Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Immigration Court.[234] The practitioner should indicate whether they are entering an appearance for bond proceedings only or for all proceedings. If no NTA has yet been filed with the immigration court, the practitioner must file a paper version of Form EOIR-28, preferably on green paper, and serve OPLA.[235] Otherwise, the practitioner must file the EOIR-28, and all other documents with the immigration court and BIA, including the bond redetermination request, electronically through the EOIR Courts & Appeals System (ECAS).[236]

The motion for a bond redetermination may be accompanied by a supporting brief. While it is a best practice to file a brief in advance of the hearing where possible so that the IJ may have time to review it prior to the hearing, practitioners may also file any documents at the bond hearing.[237] Because some IJs have limited time for oral argument at the hearing, submitting a brief is an important part of making the case to the IJ and creating a record for possible appeal. Practitioners should argue using the legal framework and relevant factors for bond discussed in section IV.H above and use the bond brief as a tool to mitigate the damaging effect of any negative factors as discussed below.[238] Practitioners may want to draw on published or unpublished BIA cases to argue why the client should be released on bond.[239]

In practice, given the time constraints in bond proceedings, many practitioners do not submit a brief. In more straightforward cases, a brief may not be needed where the practitioner has presented succinct oral argument and persuasive documentary submissions. Where the practitioner concludes that a brief may be helpful, often a short letter brief may be sufficient. To preserve the best record for appeal, practitioners should take care not to admit facts (such as a client's alienage) in written submissions or during any bond proceedings that would prove grounds of deportability

---

[233] Id. Ch. 9.3(c)(1).

[234] Form EOIR-28 can be downloaded from the EOIR website, https://www.justice.gov/eoir/file/639746/dl?inline.

[235] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 2.1(b)(1).

[236] The ECAS Portal, along with links to a program overview, frequently asked questions, and resources, can be found on the EOIR website, https://www.justice.gov/eoir/ECAS.

[237] Id. Ch. 9.3(e)(5) (unless the IJ directs otherwise).

[238] For tips on mitigating negative facts or evidence, see discussion infra at section V.A.5.

[239] Although unpublished BIA decisions are not binding on IJs, they can provide helpful frameworks for analogizing the facts of a client's case to cases the BIA has previously decided. Select unpublished BIA decisions can be accessed through, for example, the Immigrant & Refugee Appellate Center's subscription-based index: https://www.irac.net/unpublished/.

or inadmissibility, if the client plans to contest those charges or pursue suppression of evidence of alienage—since DHS could seek to introduce the bond evidence in the removal proceedings.[240] This highlights why it is important, particularly for a practitioner engaged in bond-only representation, to think beyond bond to the larger case strategy.

Service. As with all filings, the bond redetermination request must be served on OPLA.[241] The Immigration Court Practice Manual contains a sample certificate of service.[242] If the bond redetermination request is filed electronically, service on OPLA is automatic.[243]

Preparing and Filing Supplemental Documents in Support of Bond

The practitioner may submit supporting documents in advance of the hearing, along with the bond hearing request, or as a separate packet with a cover page labeled "BOND PROCEEDINGS"[244] or "Respondent's Evidence in Support of Custody Redetermination." The cover page should state "DETAINED" in the top right corner.[245] The filing should include an index of the documents or table of contents. The practitioner may also submit the documents in open court during the bond hearing, unless the IJ has ordered a document filing deadline.[246] If a practitioner wants documents filed in the removal proceedings to be considered in the bond proceeding, those documents must be separately submitted in the bond proceeding.[247]

Prior to submitting any documents to the court, the practitioner should carefully review the documents to ensure that they do not contain prejudicial information or inconsistencies and that they support the request for bond. The practitioner should also review the proposed document submission with the client so that they are familiar with what will be submitted and can be better prepared for any questioning from either OCC or the IJ.

---

240 See supra section IV.F.

241 A list of ICE OPLA offices can be found on the ICE website, www.ice.gov/contact/legal (last updated Mar. 12, 2024).

242 Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Appendix F.

243 Id. Ch. 3.2(a)(1).

244 Id. Ch. 9.3(e)(5).

245 Id. Ch. 3.3(c)(6).

246 Id. Ch. 9.3(e)(5).

247 Id.; see also supra section IV.F.

4. Hearing Preparation

General Preparation

It is wise for practitioners to take the time to learn about the particular IJ who will be presiding over the bond hearing. If the practitioner has not recently had a bond hearing before this IJ, it may be worthwhile to go to the immigration court and observe the IJ during a detained docket.[248] Some jurisdictions have a detained docket observation project run by the local AILA chapter or nonprofit groups. The practitioner should also talk to experienced local practitioners about their recent experiences before this IJ in the bond hearing context. For example, does the IJ allow for witness testimony? What kinds of questions, if any, does the IJ ask of the respondent? What kind of evidence does the IJ want to see and what factors will likely be an obstacle to granting bond for the IJ? What is a realistic amount of bond that this IJ may set? Discovering this information will allow the practitioner to develop tailored arguments and to better prepare the client for any testimony.

Approaching the DHS Attorney

It is typically advantageous to approach the OPLA attorney ahead of time to find out DHS's position on bond and determine if the parties can come to an agreement about a bond amount. Even if the OPLA attorney will not agree to a bond amount, they could signal a lack of strong opposition to bond or waive appeal at the conclusion of the bond hearing. A practitioner could contact the OPLA attorney in advance of the hearing by email or phone[249] or approach the OPLA attorney immediately prior to the bond hearing at the immigration court. OPLA attorneys have the discretion, whether or not a detained noncitizen is deemed an enforcement priority, to agree or stipulate to a bond amount or other condition of release, or waive appeal.[250] If the practitioner contacts the OPLA attorney ahead of time and it is not possible to reach an agreement, reaching out ahead of time might help give the practitioner a sense of what OPLA's arguments against bond will be, which would allow for more tailored preparation. Reaching out also provides the [248] Practitioners should contact the court to find out any court-specific procedures regarding observing a detained docket, particularly if the court allows for virtual observation.

---

[249] The practitioner will need to have either a Form EOIR-28 on file or provide a Form G-28 to the OPLA attorney in order to have a conversation about a particular case.

[250] Memorandum from Kerry E. Doyle, Principal Legal Adv., OPLA, Guidance to OPLA Attorneys Regarding the Enforcement of Civil Immigration Laws and the Exercise of Prosecutorial Discretion, at 15 (Apr. 3, 2022), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/about/offices/opla/OPLA-immigration-enforcement_guidanceApr2022.pdf (commonly referred to as "the Doyle Memo").

practitioner an opportunity to ask for a copy of the client's NTA and Form I-213 from the OPLA attorney, though the likelihood that this request will be successful may vary greatly by jurisdiction.[251] These documents assist the practitioner in better understanding what information the government has and in preparing successfully for the hearing.

Requesting Testimony

Unlike merits hearings in which the respondent is expected to testify, not all IJs expect or find it necessary for a respondent or other witnesses to testify in bond hearings. Those IJs may instead expect an offer of proof from the representative and/or a written declaration. These alternatives to oral testimony allow IJs to keep the bond hearing brief. While written declarations help IJs manage their detained dockets, they do not guarantee that the IJ has carefully read the testimony. As such, and if the pros and cons of the testimony have been carefully assessed, practitioners should orally or in writing move for leave for the respondent and any other witnesses to testify and submit a witness list, if requested. If the IJ denies the motion and then disregards information in the declaration, the due process issue is preserved for appeal.[252] Practitioners should reach out to other local practitioners to find out the typical practice in their jurisdiction and of the specific IJ who will be presiding over the bond hearing.

Preparing the Client for Testimony

A respondent may or may not testify at a bond hearing; the IJ may prefer that the representative provide an offer of proof describing what the testimony would include.[253] Some, but not all, IJs who [251] If OPLA refuses to provide the Form I-213 before the hearing but seeks to introduce it into evidence at the bond hearing, practitioners should request a continuance to review and discuss the Form I-213 with the client.

[252] Practitioners might cite to U.S. courts of appeal cases in their jurisdiction that consider due process violations generally in removal proceedings. See, e.g., Atemnkeng v. Barr, 948 F.3d 231, 242 (4th Cir. 2020) (concluding that the IJ's failure to consider respondent's testimony on remand constituted a due process violation); Zheng v. Mukasey, 552 F.3d 277, 286 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding that an IJ's failure to give any consideration to "an undeniably probative piece of evidence amounts to a denial of the traditional standards of fairness that due process demands"); Colmenar v. INS, 210 F.3d 967, 971 (9th Cir. 2000) (remanding because of due process violation where respondent "was not given a full and fair hearing or a reasonable opportunity to present evidence on his behalf"). In an unpublished decision, the BIA remanded for further consideration where the IJ had denied bond but the respondent had not been able to testify because no interpreter was provided at the bond hearing. R-L-P, AXXX-XXX-958 (BIA Oct. 12, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/365692961/R-L-P-AXXX-XXX-958-BIA-Oct-12-2017 (concluding that respondent had demonstrated prejudice as required and remanding to provide respondent an opportunity to testify in support of her bond request).

[253] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(6) (discussing an offer of proof, or proffer, the practitioner's oral statement discussing why the respondent is not a flight risk or a danger to their community). Practitioners should not prefer testimony at the bond hearing will place the client under oath before taking testimony. Whether or not the respondent presents affirmative testimony, the OPLA attorney may cross examine the respondent and the IJ may also question the respondent, so the client must be prepared to testify. The practitioner should determine the pros and cons of the client's presenting affirmative testimony. Practitioners should be mindful of the potential damaging consequences of a respondent's testimony in bond proceedings—not only for bond prospects but also in the removal case—as some IJs have relied on information offered during the bond hearing in making a decision in the removal hearing.[254] Since bond records are to be kept separate and apart from the removal hearing, practitioners can object to an IJ's use of information presented in the bond hearing in the subsequent removal hearing. However, this argument is not guaranteed to prevail and DHS could seek to introduce evidence presented during the bond hearing in the removal proceeding.

Preparing the Client for Direct Examination

If the practitioner determines that it would be beneficial for the client to testify affirmatively during the bond hearing, the practitioner should prepare the client in advance for this testimony. In some jurisdictions, the IJ may require the respondent to testify, regardless of their interest in doing so. It is crucial to investigate local practices in bond proceedings in order to adequately prepare. In general, it is better to prepare the client in case they are required to testify, rather than to be underprepared. The practitioner will want to share with the client the non-leading questions they plan to ask during direct examination and practice those questions with the client.[255] The practitioner should explain to the client the reason for these non-leading questions. The practitioner will also want to remind the client about the burden of proof and legal framework for bond proceedings, and point out the good and bad facts in the client's case. The practitioner should discuss with the client successful ways of communicating those facts during direct examination. Depending on the client's literacy level and learning style, it may be helpful to use written descriptions or visual aids to educate the client about the bond hearing and relevant testimony. The practitioner should ensure that the client is comfortable stating when they do not understand a question.

---

make an offer of proof unless facts are known and there is corroboration in the record. It is problematic when IJs attempt to elicit testimony from the representative regarding facts that would be prejudicial to the client, for example, where an IJ questions the representative about the facts behind an arrest about which there are pending criminal charges. See infra section V.A.5 (discussion beginning with heading "Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where There Are Pending Criminal Charges Against the Respondent").

[254] See supra notes 165–66 and accompanying text.

[255] For further resources on trial skills, including preparing effective direct examinations, practitioners may want to consider resources and trainings, such as immigration court advocacy specific trainings provided by the National Institute for Trial Advocacy, www.nita.org.

Preparing the Client for Cross Examination and Questions by the IJ

The client should be prepared for cross examination by the OPLA attorney and questioning by the IJ. The practitioner should explain to the client that the OPLA attorney may ask questions that call for a yes or no answer. The practitioner can explain that during a good cross examination, the government will essentially be testifying and will try to get the client to agree to its version of the facts. The practitioner should further explain that after the cross, they will have a chance to try to remedy any damage or clarify confusion through re-direct examination. Practitioners should find out ahead of time what kinds of questions the IJ and the OPLA attorney will likely ask, so that they can best prepare the client. Some common questions that may be directed at the respondent include any smuggling history, prior immigration violations including how the individual arrived in the United States, gang interactions or association, with whom the respondent lives, family relationships and closeness to those family members, any past use of controlled substances, and criminal history.[256] Practitioners should have the client practice pausing after every question to give the practitioner time to make any necessary objection. Clients should be instructed to think before answering a question, to answer only the question asked, and to ask for clarification if they do not understand a question. Practitioners can explain that generally brief answers will be more appropriate, as long answers tend to be not well thought out and can create other problems during cross examination.

Preparing the Client for Testimony Using an Interpreter

The client should be directed to immediately alert the IJ if they have problems understanding the interpreter. In general, the client should also be empowered to answer "I don't know" or "I don't remember" if those answers are accurate, rather than guessing at something the client does not know. The client should be informed that if they do not understand a question, they should state this and ask that the question be rephrased. It is wise to have the client practice asserting these responses prior to the hearing. Clients should be instructed to wait for the interpreter to restate the question in their language before answering it. If the practitioner does not speak and understand the client's language, it is wise to have a family or community member present at the bond proceeding who is fluent in both English and the client's language. That person can alert the practitioner of any inaccurate interpretation.

[256] See BALDINI-POTERMIN, supra note 226, § 4:28.

Preparing Other Witnesses for Testimony

The IJ may or may not allow witnesses to testify at the bond hearing. Practitioners should inquire in advance with colleagues or the local court clerk about whether witnesses will likely be permitted to testify, and if there are any restrictions, such as minors not being permitted to testify. Practitioners should also inquire with colleagues about what kinds of questions the IJ and the OPLA attorney will likely ask. Among other things, the OPLA attorney may ask the witness about how they entered the United States, how they acquired lawful immigration status, and where they live and work. Thus it is best for a witness to be a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident to minimize risk of negative consequences to the witness.

Practitioners should take time to prepare any witness who may testify. As with client preparation, the practitioner will want to share with the witness the questions they plan to ask and educate the witness about the burden of proof and legal framework for bond proceedings. The practitioner should highlight the aspects of the witness's testimony that would be most relevant to the client's release on bond and discuss successful ways of communicating those facts. Likewise, the witness should be informed about how to raise communication problems if there is an interpreter, and to answer "I don't know," "I don't remember," or "I don't understand" when those responses are true. The witness should also be prepared for cross examination by the OPLA attorney and questioning by the IJ. The witness should practice pausing briefly after questions on cross examination to give the practitioner time to make any necessary objection and for the witness to control their nerves. Witnesses should be reminded to think before answering a question, and to answer only the question asked.

Sometimes, such as in cases involving domestic violence allegations or convictions, a domestic partner or other victim will seek to provide written or oral testimony supporting release on bond. Practitioners should take special care in these situations. Practitioners must examine whether there is any no-contact order in place that would prohibit the practitioner from communicating with the victim, as an agent of the respondent. The IJ may want to question this type of witness about whether they are afraid of the respondent, and about how the witness's prior claims resulting in the domestic violence allegations are consistent with the witness's desire that the respondent be released. Practitioners should also consider whether there are ethical issues that would prevent speaking or working with a witness whose interests might be adverse to the client, and whether separate representation is needed. At a minimum, the practitioner should confirm in writing with the witness that they represent the respondent, not the witness.

Finally, if a witness's testimony is important but for some reason their physical appearance in court on the day of the hearing is not possible, practitioners can move for leave to present telephonic testimony, which can be done either through a written or oral motion.[257] Additionally, some immigration judges now allow for video hearings through Webex, which a practitioner might want to request when a witness's physical appearance in court is not possible.[258]

Preparing for Cross of DHS Witnesses

It is rare that DHS would present a witness at a bond hearing. However, if DHS does present any witnesses, respondents have the right to cross examine them.[259] Practitioners should prepare in advance for cross examination of any DHS witnesses. If the practitioner is not advised ahead of time that DHS intends to present a witness, they may object or seek a recess or continuance in order to prepare.

5. Mitigating Harmful Evidence, Facts, or Allegations Suggesting Dangerousness

In many cases, success or failure in seeking bond will come down to dealing with harmful or irrelevant evidence or facts that DHS will argue show that the respondent is dangerous and should not be released. BIA case law puts the burden on the respondent to prove that they would not pose a danger to the community if released, and states that the dangerousness analysis is binary—either the respondent poses a danger and should not be released, or the respondent does not pose a danger and may be released taking into consideration factors to determine the level of flight risk.[260] For this reason, it will be crucial for practitioners to develop a strategy regarding how to combat any harmful or irrelevant evidence or allegations in order to prove to the IJ that the respondent does not pose a danger. The following discussion provides preliminary tips about devising strategies to combat a dangerousness finding based on various types of "bad" evidence or facts.

Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where the Respondent Has Criminal Conviction(s)

If the respondent has prior criminal convictions, the practitioner will want to analyze each one to determine best arguments about lack of present dangerousness. Factors to consider in constructing successful arguments may include:

---

[257] The requirements for such motions can be found in the Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 4.15(n).
[258] See infra section V.B.
[259] Note that a bond hearing where the government has the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the noncitizen requires continued detention because they pose a danger or are a flight risk will also require that ICE conduct the direct examination and the practitioner conduct the cross examination.
[260] See supra section IV.H-I.

- Lack of recency of any criminal activity
- Lack of any injury to a victim or damage to property resulting from the criminal activity[261]
- Showing that the criminal conduct was accidental, negligent, or "at worst, reckless," along with other positive factors such as family and community ties and eligibility for relief[262]
- The offense was treated as minor by the criminal adjudicative body, for example that it was classified as a "petty" offense, misdemeanor, or that the person was not sentenced to any jail time
- If there was a victim, having a declaration or testimony from the victim supporting the respondent's release and providing further context demonstrating that the respondent does not pose a danger to the community[263]
- If the client has any family or friends in law enforcement, a letter from that person discussing lack of dangerousness and taking the conviction into account
- Evidence showing the client's rehabilitation, such as attendance in rehabilitation programs (including while in detention) and evidence that the respondent is making efforts to address drug, alcohol, anger, or other problems
- Written declaration or oral testimony from the client evidencing responsibility, remorse, and rehabilitation
- Letters from family or friends stating that they will support the client on release including efforts toward rehabilitation (for example, driving the client to Alcoholics Anonymous meetings)
- Expert evidence, such as a psychological examination, concluding that the client does not pose a danger to the community or is not likely to commit another offense
- Whether the client received good time credits (including listing the relevant factors for receiving those credits), displayed positive behavior while incarcerated, did well on probation, or other evidence that the client was amenable to rehabilitation under the criminal justice system. Consider what evidence might be obtained to establish this, including a letter of recommendation from a probation officer or certificates of completed programming. Practitioners should check to see whether favorable

---

[261] Significant to the Board's analysis in Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018), was the fact that at least three of the respondent's DUI incidents had involved accidents. Since Siniauskas was issued, many unpublished BIA cases have distinguished those facts from other DUI histories that did not involve accidents or injuries and therefore did not reflect dangerousness. See supra section IV.I.1

[262] See, e.g., Eddy Bismarck Nunez-Garrido, A099 115 048 (BIA Feb. 3, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/155930372/Eddy-Bismark-Nunez-Garrido-A099-115-048-BIA-Feb-3-2011.

[263] See discussion of caveats to consider when presenting victim testimony, supra section V.A.4, in the section entitled "Hearing Preparation."

assessments exist that evidence lack of dangerousness or amenability to release. For example, there could be bail assessments, chemical dependency assessments, presentence investigation reports, or records from time in custody in which the respondent was assessed as a good candidate for release within the state criminal justice system

- Any post-release plan that shows, for example, acceptance into a residential alcohol treatment program in the case of a client with a DUI[264]
- If the respondent is on criminal probation, practitioners may wish to highlight probation tracking mechanisms that will take effect upon release, such as drug or alcohol monitoring and regular check-ins[265]
- Arguments that past convictions are insufficient to establish present or future dangerousness.[266] Argue that the IJ must conduct an individualized analysis that considers the recency and seriousness of the convictions as well as the evidence of rehabilitation, and
- If the criminal conduct occurred while the respondent was a juvenile, present scientific studies that suggest that delinquent conduct as a minor is not representative of how the individual will behave as an adult with a fully developed brain.[267]

[264] See, e.g., E-C-, AXXX XXX 516 (BIA Apr. 20, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/349318995/E-C-AXXX-XXX-516-Bia-April-20-2017 (dismissing DHS's appeal of a $7,500 bond for a respondent with two 2016 DUI convictions, where the IJ's bond order directed that the respondent remain in treatment after release and the respondent had provided evidence of his participation in alcohol rehabilitation programs while in detention, his enrollment in a residential treatment program if released, and his family support). While the BIA in Matter of Siniauskas concluded that the respondent's evidence of rehabilitation, including evidence of participation in Alcoholics Anonymous and medical treatment, was insufficient to prove lack of dangerousness following multiple DUIs, in that case, the BIA noted that the mitigation factors the respondent presented had "existed prior to his most recent arrest, and . . . did not deter his conduct." 27 I&N Dec. at 210.

[265] See, e.g., Appeal ID 5322177 (BIA Feb. 18, 2022) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/684009629/Appeal-ID-5322177-BIA-Feb-18-2022?secret_password=ChJg26NzOOeOmgeB7R7i (dismissing DHS's appeal of bond determination where respondent had strict supervised probation requirements to meet upon release).

[266] Cf. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 750 (1987) (upholding constitutionality of pretrial detention scheme found in Bail Reform Act that allowed for detention of those accused of "extremely serious offenses" after a "full-blown adversary hearing" in which the government has the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that "no conditions of release can reasonably assure the safety of the community or any person"); Chi Thon Ngo v. INS., 192 F.3d 390, 398 (3d Cir. 1999) (noting that, in context of individual detained for a prolonged period after an order of removal, "presenting danger to the community at one point by committing crime does not place them forever beyond redemption").

[267] See Laurence Steinberg, A Dual Systems Model of Adolescent Risk-Taking, 52 DEVELOPMENTAL PSYCHOBIOLOGY 216 (Mar. 8, 2010), onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1002/dev.20445/pdf.

Showing Lack of Dangerousness Where There Are Pending Criminal Charges Against the Respondent

In some situations, the outcome of pending charges will affect the client's eligibility for relief. Practitioners should consider whether the client's chances for a good bond outcome would be increased if the client postponed the bond hearing and sought to resolve the pending criminal charges first. This may be a particularly useful strategy if the pending charges are serious or a conviction would cause mandatory detention and it is likely that the IJ will deny bond based on them. If the respondent has a criminal defense attorney, practitioners should reach out to this person and discuss the possibility of having the state court issue a writ (i.e., an order) to return the client to state custody to face the charges. If there is no criminal defense attorney, practitioners could reach out to local public defenders to find out if one could be appointed, and if not, reach out to or partner with a local criminal defense attorney who can assist with this process. Practitioners should also coordinate with criminal defense counsel to craft a plan for what to do if ICE ignores or refuses to honor the state court writ. If criminal defense counsel is not able to obtain a writ, practitioners can also inquire whether there are other criminal law mechanisms to resolve the pending charge, such as having the client enter a written, favorable plea agreement, dismissal for failure to prosecute, or through speedy trial or mandatory disposition of detainers act provisions.[268]

---

[268] If the client is facing pending federal charges, there may be additional arguments to raise in the federal court criminal proceedings which, if successful, could result in dismissal of the federal case or prevent the client's being transferred to ICE custody upon release from federal criminal custody. See, e.g., United States v. Santos-Flores, 794 F.3d 1088 (9th Cir. 2015) (concluding that existence of an ICE detainer was not an adequate reason to deny release under the Bail Reform Act and that if an individual fails to appear due to having been placed into ICE custody the court may craft an "appropriate remedy"); United States v. Boutin, 269 F. Supp. 3d 24 (E.D.N.Y. 2017); United States v. Trujillo-Alvarez, 900 F. Supp. 2d 1167 (D. Or. 2012) (ordering that federal criminal defendant who had been ordered released from criminal custody under the Bail Reform Act either be released from ICE custody or federal charge would be dismissed with prejudice). Multiple circuit courts, however, have explicitly held that there is no conflict between the Bail Reform Act and ICE's authority under the INA to detain and facilitate a noncitizen's removal, even while the criminal case is still pending. See United States v. Baltazar-Sebastian, 990 F.3d 939, 945 (5th Cir. 2021) (agreeing with other circuits that have held that "pretrial release under the [Bail Reform Act] does not preclude pre-removal detention under the INA"); United States v. Barrera-Landa, 964 F.3d 912 (10th Cir. 2020); United States v. Vasquez-Benitez, 919 F.3d 546, 553-54 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (reversing district court decision prohibiting ICE from detaining defendant after release from federal custody based on the mistaken belief that the Bail Reform Act was the exclusive authority for detaining a defendant charged with illegal reentry); United States v. Soriano Nunez, 928 F.3d 240, 247 (3d Cir. 2019); United States v. Lett, 944 F.3d 467, 470-71 (2d Cir. 2019); United States v. Veloz-Alonso, 910 F.3d 266, 270 (6th Cir. 2018) (finding no conflict between the Bail Reform Act and the INA's mandate to detain "certain illegal [noncitizens]"); see also United States v. Lopez, No. 23-CR-10269-AK, 2023 WL 8039318, at *2, *6 (D. Mass. Nov. 20, 2023) (holding (1) that the risk of ICE removing the defendant while defendant's criminal proceeding is pending, thereby risking defendant's nonappearance at future court dates, did not warrant defendant's continued criminal detention under the Bail Reform Act; and (2) that the Bail Reform Act does not allow courts to "thwart" ICE's enforcement of the immigration laws); United States v. Villatoro-Ventura, 330 F. Supp. 3d 1118 (N.D.

When a respondent seeking bond has pending criminal charges, practitioners should expect DHS to argue that those pending charges establish dangerousness and preclude the respondent's release. The idea that pending charges (even where there has been no determination of guilt) can establish dangerousness is supported by BIA precedent, including in Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018) and Matter of Guerra, 24 I&N Dec. 37 (BIA 2006). Some IJs may assume that the facts alleged in the underlying arrest or police reports are true. To counter these arguments, practitioners should focus on how the facts in the particular case differ from the Guerra case,[269] where the BIA found that the allegations in the criminal complaint were sufficiently "specific and detailed." The purpose is to establish why the proffered evidence is not probative or reliable and thus not deserving of consideration. Practitioners should ground arguments within BIA precedents and also the due process evidentiary framework that governs removal proceedings. Under that framework, the test for whether evidence should be admitted is "whether it is probative and its admission is fundamentally fair."[270] If the facts permit, practitioners should point out how in their case, unlike in Guerra:

- The evidence of the alleged criminal activity is not specific and detailed[271]
- The source of the allegations is not clear
- The author of the report or complaint is not identified
- There is a history of false charges against the respondent
- The charges are clearly overbroad compared to the conducted alleged, or
- Other reasons exist that raise doubt about the respondent's guilt.

Practitioners could also argue that charging documents are not proof of the alleged conduct described in them, and that although the IJ can look at them, they should not be taken as true

---

Iowa 2018) (concluding that dismissal of defendant's indictment for illegal reentry was not warranted based on his detention by ICE following his pretrial release under the Bail Reform Act).

[269] Practitioners could also point out that in Matter of Siniauskas there did not appear to be any challenge to the consideration of the pending DUI charge in the dangerousness analysis, or any dispute about the accuracy of the allegations.

[270] Matter of Y-S-L-C-, 26 I&N Dec. 688, 690 (BIA 2015).

[271] Practitioners may also want to cite United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739 (1987), a case interpreting the provisions of the Bail Reform Act that required the government to prove by clear and convincing evidence that no conditions could reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community in order to justify pretrial detention. In Salerno, the Supreme Court noted that the government must prove an "identified and articulable threat to an individual or the community" to justify pretrial detention. While the context of civil immigration detention is distinct, practitioners could argue that similar principles apply when weighing unproven allegations and their effect on a dangerousness determination precluding release.

given their unreliability and the presumption of innocence.[272] Of course, a prior conviction for the same or similar charged conduct will make it more difficult to succeed with the above arguments.[273]

In Ortega-Rangel v. Sessions, 313 F. Supp. 3d 993 (N.D. Cal. 2018), a federal district court ruled that an IJ's denial of bond relying only on the fact of the habeas petitioner's arrest and pending charge for possession for sale of a controlled substance violated due process. The court reasoned that the mere fact of the respondent's arrest was not "probative and specific" evidence as required by Guerra, and contrasted the evidence in the case with the evidence in the Guerra case. The district court noted that the IJ had found that the petitioner had sold drugs but the record did not contain sufficient evidence to show that she had committed the crime she was arrested for. The court noted that that the respondent did not have a criminal record, had not admitted to selling drugs, that there had been no probable cause determination by the state court, and that the sheriff's office declaration did not contain facts showing that she sold drugs. The district court ordered that the IJ conduct a bond hearing compliant with due process within 15 days. Where relevant, practitioners could draw on the reasoning of this case in distinguishing Guerra and Siniauskas and arguing for release on bond for clients with pending charges.

When the charges, even if proven, do not tend to establish that the respondent is dangerous, the practitioner will want to make this argument. Some of the arguments about criminal convictions discussed in the section above may be drawn upon in this context. For example, if the pending charge is for a minor state law infraction that does not carry possible jail time and does not involve any injury to property or persons, the practitioner could argue that this pending allegation is not relevant to the dangerousness analysis.

Practitioners could also consider arguing, in the context of a respondent with pending domestic violence-related charges, that the existence of an active state court protection order is a mitigating factor, because there will be immediate, state-imposed consequences if the respondent violates the order. Other mitigation arguments in the domestic violence context would include proof that the respondent has moved out or intends to move out, together with documentary evidence of the new residence, and that the respondent understands the need to change their way of communication. Furthermore, any evidence of the respondent's willingness to enroll in anger management programs or participate in therapy may support a stated intention to rehabilitate.

---

[272] See A-B-L-, AXXX XXX 554 (BIA Jan. 23, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/371995648/A-B-L-AXXX-XXX-554-BIA-Jan-23-2018?secret_password=C0ZTEsNPH6bdXUhv5m1h (reversing dangerousness determination because little weight could be given to conduct only described in police documents where respondent was never prosecuted for the conduct and the information was not corroborated). See also discussion below under subheading "Showing Lack of Dangerousness When DHS Introduces Harmful Allegations, in the Absence of Any Pending Charges or Criminal Convictions" (further discussing potential strategies to challenge allegations in the absence of a conviction and noting relevant case law).

[273] Cf. Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. at 209 (concluding that no bond warranted where respondent had previous DUI convictions and a recent DUI arrest, noting that he "asserts that he will not repeat his dangerous drinking and driving behavior, but his actions are a better indication of his future conduct than his assurances to the contrary").

For a pending DUI charge, mitigation arguments might include showing that the respondent has arranged for other means of transportation, such as selling the car or stating that they understand that they are not permitted to drive and will not drive if released. Family and friends writing supporting declarations can include their intention to provide transportation to the respondent if released. The respondent may also include evidence that they intend to use public transportation. In some cases, substance abuse treatment programs will allow individuals who are detained to make appointments to initiate services even if still in ICE custody. Practitioners should seek to distinguish Matter of Siniauskas, 27 I&N Dec. 207 (BIA 2018), where the BIA concluded that no bond should be set for a respondent with a pending DUI charge and previous DUI convictions. Section IV.I.1 above provides some ideas for how this case might be distinguished.[274] In sum, the mitigation arguments and documentation should be tailored to the nature of the alleged criminal activity.

Invoking the Fifth Amendment Privilege. If the respondent chooses to go forward with the bond hearing while criminal charges are pending or if there are arrests that have not yet led to a conviction, practitioners should prepare the client for what to do if the OPLA attorney or the IJ asks the client questions about the underlying conduct. Answering such questions could implicate the client's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and prejudice the client's options in future criminal proceedings.[275] If the client has a criminal defense attorney, it would be wise to consult with this person in developing a strategy. Even if there is no criminal defense attorney currently assigned to the case, practitioners should still consult with a criminal defense attorney about the options. Practitioners should consider possible strategies and thoroughly inform the client of their rights and the consequences of answering the questions, and provide the client with careful advice before the hearing.

---

[274] See 27 I&N Dec. at 210 (noting that the respondent "has not shown how his family circumstances would mitigate his history of drinking and driving" and noting that there could be situations where a family member's "influence over a young respondent's conduct could affect the likelihood that he would engage in future dangerous activity").

[275] Even without pending criminal charges, there may be instances in which a client's Fifth Amendment rights are implicated. For example, if the plan is to file a motion to suppress evidence of alienage and contest the charges in the NTA, the practitioner should take care to ensure that no independent admissions of alienage are made at the bond hearing that could be used against the respondent in the removal proceedings to establish alienage. See supra section IV.F (discussing the regulation that bond proceedings be kept separate and apart, as well as its limitations).

When considering whether or not to invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege, practitioners should advise the client that the IJ may draw an adverse inference if the client chooses to remain silent.[276] If a client wishes to invoke the Fifth Amendment, practitioners should consider filing a motion in limine seeking to prohibit questioning of the client about the underlying conduct based on the Fifth Amendment privilege, perhaps with a letter from criminal defense counsel. If this is not successful, the practitioner should advise the client of the need to invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege in response to each question that could elicit incriminating information and prepare the client on how to do so.[277] If the client has difficulty asserting this privilege, the practitioner could argue that this privilege can be invoked by the practitioner.[278]

The option of asserting the Fifth Amendment privilege must be balanced against the respondent's burden of proof in bond proceedings, including the burden to show that their release would not pose a danger. Current precedents allow an IJ to consider pending charges in the dangerousness analysis. This "catch-22" scenario demonstrates the harmful effect on respondents' rights when ICE chooses to arrest and detain an individual who is in the midst of criminal court proceedings. The individual is prevented from being able to face the criminal charges, sometimes is issued a warrant for failure to appear at the criminal proceeding, and is also prejudiced at the immigration bond hearing because of the pending charge that ICE prevented the respondent from confronting. Practitioners should consider other ways besides the respondent's testimony to argue that the allegations are unreliable and should be afforded minimal weight.

Showing Lack of Dangerousness When DHS Introduces Harmful Allegations, in the Absence of Any Pending Charges or Criminal Convictions

In cases where DHS introduces harmful allegations or evidence of previous arrests, but there are no pending charges or convictions, practitioners may want to consider some of the strategies detailed in the sections above related to respondents with pending charges. For example, practitioners could contrast the proffered DHS evidence in the particular case from the "specific and detailed" evidence the BIA accepted in Guerra.

---

[276] See, e.g., Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 318 (1976) ("[T]he Fifth Amendment does not forbid adverse inferences against parties to civil actions when they refuse to testify in response to probative evidence offered against them. . . ."); Gutierrez v. Holder, 662 F.3d 1083, 1091 (9th Cir. 2011) ("In a deportation hearing there is no prohibition against drawing an adverse inference when a petitioner invokes his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.").

[277] The practitioner should help the client practice invoking the Fifth Amendment privilege. One strategy is to type out a sentence for the client to state and have them practice it many times.

[278] See Matter of Sandoval, 17 I&N Dec. 70, 72 n.1 (BIA 1979) (finding that the Fifth Amendment privilege had been properly raised where the respondent stated that she did not "like to answer," counsel explained that the client was in fact invoking the privilege, and the client faced a "language barrier").

Practitioners can argue that the IJ's discretion is not so broad as to extend to conduct that does not lead to charges, unlike the facts of Guerra and Siniauskas where charges had been filed.[279] In particular, practitioners can argue that evidence in bond hearings must meet the same standards for being probative and reliable that are applicable generally in removal proceedings, since this standard is grounded in the due process requirement of fundamental fairness.[280] Practitioners may want to consider the common reasons why an arrest does not lead to a charge in making the argument that allegations related to an uncharged arrest should not be given weight. For example, perhaps the prosecuting agency could not pursue charges because there was insufficient evidence that a crime had been committed, or an informant recanted the allegations that formed the basis for the arrest. It may be worthwhile to investigate why the law enforcement office that arrested the client did not pursue charges.

If the arrest did not lead to formal charges, but did lead to an ICE transfer, or if the arrest led to gang allegations without formal charges, practitioners could reach out to the arresting law enforcement officer and request their presence at the bond hearing. This strategy may be useful where the circumstances of the arrest suggest that the underlying allegations were unfounded or pretextual. If the law enforcement officer does not agree to come voluntarily or does not respond to the request after a reasonable amount of time, the practitioner may wish to seek the immigration court's assistance by ordering a deposition or issuing a subpoena.[281] If the law enforcement officer does not testify despite these efforts, practitioners could argue that the court should give no weight to the arrest report in the absence of the officer's testimony. Practitioners should only pursue this strategy if they conclude that the potential risks of having the officer testify outweigh the benefits, and should carefully prepare witness examination.

Practitioners should consider specific strategies to challenge the allegations' admission into evidence, or to argue that they should be given little weight. These arguments will depend on the nature of the documents the OPLA attorney introduces containing the allegations. In general,

---

[279] See, e.g., A-B-L-, AXXX XXX 554 (BIA Jan. 23, 2018) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/371995648/A-B-L-AXXX-XXX-554-BIA-Jan-23-2018?secret_password=C0ZTEsNPH6bdXUhv5m1h (finding "little weight" could be given to conduct only described in police documents–that stolen property was seized from respondent's home–where respondent was never prosecuted for the conduct and the information in the report was not independently corroborated, because the BIA "share[s] the respondent's concerns regarding the probativeness of the evidence cited in support of" the IJ's determination).

[280] See, e.g., Matter of Y-S-L-C-, 26 I&N Dec. 688, 690 (BIA 2015) (citing the evidentiary standard applicable in removal proceedings).

[281] See 8 CFR §§ 1003.35(a) (providing that an IJ "may order the taking of deposition either at his or her own instance or upon application of a party"); 1003.35(b) (describing IJ subpoena authority). For information on the immigration court subpoena issuance process, see Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 4.20 (discussing subpoenas).

though, these arguments are based on the "fundamental fairness" standard for admission of evidence in removal proceedings – that is, arguing that the evidence is not probative or reliable. Some questions to consider include:

- What about the document makes it unreliable?[282]
- Are there obvious factual errors?[283]
- Does the document lack detail or is it unsupported by other evidence in the record?[284]
- What is the source of the statements contained in the document?[285]
- How was the document prepared or created? The OPLA attorney may not lay proper foundation for documents they seek to introduce.
- Is the source for the document's statements identified or does the document rely on confidential informants or other undisclosed sources?[286]

---

[282] See, e.g., Pouhova v. Holder, 726 F.3d 1007 (7th Cir. 2013) (remanding after determining that the government's evidence against the respondent should not have been admitted because it was unreliable and there was no opportunity to cross examine the documents' authors, where one statement was taken without an interpreter and another document memorializing a conversation was written seven years after the conversation happened); Lin v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 459 F.3d 255, 269 (2d Cir. 2006) (concluding that consular report submitted by DHS was unreliable where it was based on the opinions of Chinese government officials who had "powerful incentives" not to be candid and lacked detail).

[283] See, e.g., Alexandrov v. Gonzales, 442 F.3d 395, 407 (6th Cir. 2006) (noting that a government memorandum was unreliable because, among other things, it contained significant errors). But see, e.g., Jian Hui He v. Holder, 589 F. App'x 587, 589 (2d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (upholding reliance on government document despite the fact that it "inaccurately identified [the petitioner] as female, given the accuracy of the other, more detailed identifying information, i.e., [petitioner's] name, date of birth, and passport number" (emphasis in original)).

[284] See, e.g., Lin, 459 F.3d at 270 (lack of detail); Ezeagwuna v. Ashcroft, 325 F.3d 396, 408 (3d Cir. 2003); C-A-B-, AXXX XXX 164 (BIA Feb. 5, 2020) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/447702858/C-A-B-AXXX-XXX-164-BIA-Feb-5-2020?secret_password=q6F1M5Vkxmk79a3aIWn3 (dismissing DHS's appeal on dangerousness grounds because the allegations in the document lacked detail and were unsupported by other evidence in the record).

[285] See, e.g., Lin, 459 F.3d at 272 (concluding that government document should have been excluded in part because the source of the information was "highly unreliable"); Ezeagwuna, 325 F.3d at 406 (concluding that it was a due process violation to rely on government documents that reported the statements of "declarants who are far removed from the evidence sought to be introduced").

[286] See, e.g., Grigoryan v. Barr, 959 F.3d 1233, 1240 (9th Cir. 2020) (finding that the IJ's reliance on a one-page record of investigation violated petitioner's due process where the document relied solely on unnamed sources and did not include supporting evidence); Banat v. Holder, 557 F.3d 886, 892 (8th Cir. 2009) (concluding that government evidence was unreliable in part because it relied on unidentified sources without any attempt to verify the claims made by the source or any showing of the qualifications or experience of the unidentified sources); Alexandrov, 442 F.3d at 407 (concluding that IJ should not have relied on Department of State report because it was unreliable, in part because it did not identify who the investigator was or what type of investigation was conducted).

- Is ICE relying on evidence that the client is listed in a gang database? If so, can evidence be introduced to show that the gang database is unreliable?[287] For example, what "evidence" was relied on to justify the client's inclusion in the database?
- Does the person making the allegations have a bias? For example, did racial profiling play a role in the stop? In examining law enforcement officer bias, practitioners could investigate whether complaints have been filed against that particular officer and whether there is a pattern of race-based conduct.
- Is the proffered evidence irrelevant? For example, if DHS seeks to introduce generalized information not specific to the particular respondent, such as a flyer about the dangers of DUIs, the practitioner could object on relevance grounds and argue in the alternative that it should be afforded little weight.

Practitioners should make objections to the admission of DHS evidence when the evidence fails to meet the immigration court evidentiary standard, and argue in the alternative that even if the evidence is admitted, it should be afforded minimal weight.[288]

Objections Based on Hearsay

Many types of allegations that DHS seeks to introduce to prove a respondent's dangerousness may be in the form of hearsay, such as police reports or DHS memos of gang affiliation. Hearsay is an out-of-court statement used to prove the truth of the matter asserted.[289] Practitioners should [287] For an overview of the consequences of gang allegations, see National Immigrant Justice Center, Consequences of Unreliable Transnational Gang Allegations (Sept. 30, 2021), https://immigrantjustice.org/staff/blog/consequences-unreliable-transnational-gang-allegations. For a discussion of gang databases, see CUNY School of Law Immigrant and Non-Citizen Rights Clinic, Toolkit to Challenge Gang Allegations Against Immigrant New Yorkers (2019), https://www.law.cuny.edu/academics/clinical-programs/immigration/challenging-gang-allegations-against-immigrant-new-yorkers-toolkit; National Immigration Law Center, Untangling the Immigration Enforcement Web, at 10–12 (Sept. 2017), www.nilc.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/09/Untangling-Immigration-Enforcement-Web-2017-09.pdf [hereinafter "Untangling the Immigration Enforcement Web"]; Immigrant Legal Resource Center, Practice Advisory: Understanding Allegations of Gang Membership/Affiliation in Immigration Cases (Apr. 2017), www.ilrc.org/sites/default/files/resources/ilrc_gang_advisory-20170509.pdf [hereinafter "Understanding Allegations of Gang Membership"]. For specific strategies to combat gang allegations in immigration court, see Immigrant Defense Project, C*hallenging Evidence of Gang-Related Activity at Immigration Court Bond Hearings* (Aug. 3, 2017), www.immigrantdefenseproject.org/wp-content/uploads/Practice-Note-8-3-17-gang-bond-hearings-1.pdf.

---

[288] For an overview on objections and the rules of evidence in immigration court, see Hon. Dorothy Harbeck, Stetson Journal of Advocacy and the Law, Objections in Immigration Court: Dost Thou Protest Too Much or Too Little? (20180), https://www2.stetson.edu/advocacy-journal/wp-content/uploads/2018/05/Harbeck_2018.pdf.

[289] F. R. Evid. 801(c) ("Hearsay means a statement that: (1) the declarant does not make while testifying at the current trial or hearing; and (2) a party offers in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted in the statement.").

analyze separately each layer of hearsay in a document and what arguments can be made against its admission into evidence. Unlike in federal court proceedings, in immigration court hearsay is generally admissible, and case law supports the admission of hearsay statements such as police reports in the consideration of a respondent's request for discretionary relief.[290] However, hearsay evidence may be excluded if it is unreliable or its admission would otherwise be fundamentally unfair. Thus, practitioners should make particularized arguments about why admission of the proffered ICE hearsay evidence would be fundamentally unfair, and argue in the alternative that if the immigration court decides to admit the hearsay evidence over the respondent's objection, it should be afforded minimal weight. Instead of, or in addition to, grounding the objection within a hearsay framework, the practitioner might also consider objecting, where appropriate, based on the source's lack of personal knowledge, speculation, improper lay witness opinion, conclusory statements, or attack the qualifications of any source the OPLA attorney tries to present as an "expert."

Arguments to consider in challenging aspects of the hearsay evidence include:

- Lack of oversight and due process involved in creating the record (for example, in the gang database context), makes it unreliable[291]
- The evidence contains multiple levels of hearsay, indicating that it is unreliable[292]
- The evidence relies on statements from an unnamed confidential source and thus it would be unfair to admit it given the impossibility of evaluating the reliability of the source
- ICE has not produced the source for cross examination and thus it would be unfair to admit the hearsay into evidence in light of the respondent's statutory right to "examine the evidence against [them] . . . and to cross examine witnesses presented by the

---

[290] See, e.g., Carcamo v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 498 F.3d 94, 98 (2d Cir. 2007) ("[P]olice reports and complaints, even if containing hearsay and not a part of the formal record of conviction, are appropriately admitted for the purposes of considering an application for discretionary relief."); Matter of Grijalva, 19 I&N Dec. 713, 722 (BIA 1998) ("[T]he admission into the record of the information contained in the police reports is especially appropriate in cases involving discretionary relief from deportation, where all relevant factors concerning an arrest and conviction should be considered to determine whether [a noncitizen] warrants a favorable exercise of discretion.").

[291] See Untangling the Immigration Enforcement Web, supra note 287, at 10–12; Understanding Allegations of Gang Membership, supra note 287.

[292] See, e.g., Banat, 557 F.3d at 892 (concluding that government document should not have been relied on due to its lack of details and given that it contained "multiple levels of hearsay"); Lin, 459 F.3d at 272 (concluding that a document was unreliable in part because it "contain[ed] multiple levels of hearsay that exacerbate its myriad reliability problems"); Ezeagwuna, 325 F.3d at 406 (concluding that the BIA erred in relying on government document that contained "multiple hearsay of the most troubling kind").

Government."[293] To fully preserve this argument, practitioners should request to cross examine the source of the statements, including asking the court to issue a subpoena or seeking a deposition,[294] and

- The fact that there is no corroboration for the hearsay evidence [295] and, if true, that there is contrary evidence in the record (submitted by the respondent).[296]

This last point is particularly important. While the BIA has generally upheld admission of hearsay evidence such as arrest records and police reports in consideration of a respondent's application for discretionary relief,[297] it has also suggested that independent corroborative evidence is required in order to justify giving such hearsay records substantial weight. For example, in one unpublished decision, the BIA remanded concluding that the gang affiliation evidence provided by DHS (a Facebook printout) was not sufficient to show that the respondent was a danger to the community and thus not amenable to release on bond.[298] Accordingly, practitioners should argue that without corroborative evidence, hearsay allegations should be afforded minimal weight.[299]

---

[293] INA § 240(b)(4)(B); see, e.g., Arias-Minaya v. Holder, 779 F.3d 49, 55 (1st Cir. 2015) (concluding that consideration of hearsay in police report was proper in part because "both the IJ and the BIA determined that use of the police report was not fundamentally unfair since the petitioner was given an opportunity to challenge its veracity and refute its contents"); Bondarenko v. Holder, 733 F.3d 899, 907 (9th Cir. 2013) (concluding that petitioner's due process rights were violated when the IJ refused to grant him a continuance to investigate a forensic report introduced by DHS at the hearing); Pouhova, 726 F.3d at 1016 (concluding that it was in violation of petitioner's statutory rights and not fundamentally fair to admit government's unreliable hearsay documents without giving her an reasonable opportunity to cross examine the source).

[294] Practitioners should also consider the possible drawbacks of in-person testimony from a DHS witness in terms of how such testimony might weaken the respondent's case for bond. This will of course depend on the individual circumstances of the case.

[295] See, e.g., Abbas v. Lynch, 647 F. App'x 671, 672 (9th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (upholding reliance on reports where they were corroborated by testimony); Avila-Ramirez v. Holder, 764 F.3d 717, 724 (7th Cir. 2014) (finding error in giving "significant weight to uncorroborated arrest reports" where the respondent "denied any wrongdoing" and "was not prosecuted or convicted after these arrests, and there was no corroboration introduced at the immigration hearing"); Lanzas-Ramirez v. Att'y Gen., 508 F. App'x 885, 889 (11th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (noting that the police report was corroborated by a police officer deposition summarizing interviews of alleged victims, in contrast to in Arreguin where the BIA "implicitly acknowledged . . . reliability concerns when it decided to give little weight to arrest reports that are not corroborated by other evidence" (internal quotations omitted)); Garces v. Att'y Gen., 611 F.3d 1337, 1350 (11th Cir. 2010) ("Absent corroboration, the arrest reports by themselves do not offer reasonable, substantial, and probative evidence that there is reason to believe Garces engaged in drug trafficking."); Matter of Arreguin, 21 I&N 38, 42 (BIA 1995).

[296] See Diaz Ortiz v. Garland, 23 F.4th 1, 16–17 (1st Cir. 2022) (en banc).

[297] See, e.g., Grijalva, 19 I&N Dec. at 722.

[298] Rigoberto Alfonso Sibrian, A095 707 745, 2010 WL 1976004, at *1 (BIA Apr. 23, 2010) (unpublished) (sustaining appeal and remanding to IJ to determine appropriate bond amount, where IJ considered DHS allegations, denied by respondent, that he was associated with a gang based on printout of respondent's Facebook page).

[299] Though occurring in a different context, at least one circuit court has also held that the IJ erred when it did not conduct a "threshold determination of reliability" of DHS's evidence of gang membership—a gang packet—despite respondent's evidence regarding the packet's unreliability. Diaz Ortiz, 23 F.4th at 16–17 (vacating and remanding the BIA's

Where possible, practitioners should also present their own contrary evidence that establishes why the DHS evidence should be afforded minimal weight (and that also demonstrates why the respondent should be granted bond).[300] Indeed, the BIA in Guerra specifically noted that "the respondent failed to present any evidence or argument that tended to undermine the reliability of the information contained in the complaint."[301] Examples of contrary evidence might include a short declaration from the respondent refuting the allegations, a letter from the alleged victim or a witness discussing what really happened,[302] or a declaration from a paralegal stating that they ordered records and they do not exist. Practitioners should consider asking a reputable person such as a law clerk to do an independent factual investigation of the allegations and present their findings in a declaration. In the alternative, if no third party is available to conduct the investigation, practitioners may consider whether the applicable rules of professional conduct permit the practitioner to conduct the investigation themselves and present the findings in a declaration.[303] order for a new credibility finding where the respondent had submitted an expert affidavit critiquing the gang packet submitted by DHS and a brief describing why DHS's gang determination was unreliable, including that it can arguably criminalize "normal teenage behavior").

---

[300] In preparing for the hearing, practitioners should consider whether it will benefit the client to cross examine the source of any derogatory information put forward by DHS. Practitioners should also think carefully about whether such testimony could further damage the respondent's case before seeking to question an adverse witness on the record. If the practitioner believes that cross examination of the source of the derogatory information would benefit the client, the practitioner should ask for the opportunity to cross examine the source and, if relevant, seek a subpoena from the IJ. In arguing for a subpoena or a deposition, practitioners might point out that under INA § 240(b)(4)(B), respondents have the right to examine the evidence against them and to cross examine the government's witnesses. Practitioners could argue that denying the respondent the opportunity to question the source of derogatory information and then relying on that derogatory information to reach a negative decision would violate notions of fundamental fairness.

[301] 24 I&N Dec. at 39.

[302] Practitioners should be mindful of ethical rules and possible unintended consequences when seeking the participation of alleged victims. See supra Section V.A.4 under subheading entitled "Hearing Preparation."

[303] In particular, practitioners will want to look at ABA Model Rule 3.7 and its state law equivalents. Rule 3.7 prohibits, with some exceptions, lawyers from "act[ing] as advocate at a trial in which the lawyer is likely to be a necessary witness . . . ." ABA Model Rules of Professional Responsibility, Rule 3.7, www.americanbar.org/groups/professional_responsibility/publications/model_rules_of_professional_conduct/rule_3_7_lawyer_as_witness.html. Even if the practitioner determines that a dual witness-advocate role is permitted in the non-jury trial, administrative bond hearing context, they should be prepared for the IJ to strike the declaration since courts "disfavor[] attorney testimony regarding factual matters, contested or uncontested." Whitted v. Gen. Motors Corp., 58 F.3d 1200, 1204 (7th Cir. 1995) (affirming, in a non-immigration court context, the lower court's decision to strike an attorney affidavit). But see, e.g., Heard v. Foxshire Associates, LLC., 806 A.2d 348 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2002) (discussing the use of "at trial" in Rule 3.7 and concluding that the Maryland Rules of Professional Conduct distinguish between "at trial" and administrative hearings: "We further conclude that the MRPC does not preclude the giving of evidence by an attorney of record for a party before an administrative agency.").

Note on Smuggling Allegations

Practitioners should be prepared for the possibility that the IJ or the OPLA attorney will ask the respondent questions about any smuggling history. When advising clients on how to respond to these questions, practitioners should consider how admissions relating to smuggling could affect the client's removal case or have criminal consequences. In arguing that past smuggling-related conduct is not evidence of dangerousness, practitioners can remind the IJ that DHS has characterized smuggling as "a crime against a border" in contrast to human trafficking, which DHS has labeled as "a crime against a person."[304] Smuggling-related conduct is therefore more akin to a trespass to land violation, and not a dangerous criminal offense. Using DHS's own distinction, the IJ should therefore not factor past smuggling-related conduct into the dangerousness assessment.

B. Bond Hearing Practice Tips

As always, practitioners should review the Immigration Court Practice Manual, relevant EOIR policy guidance,[305] and any local immigration court rules pertinent to bond hearings. Practitioners who have not recently handled a bond matter before the specific IJ may also wish to observe a bond hearing presided over by that IJ prior to the day of the bond proceeding. Local practices can change frequently, as can the practices of OPLA attorneys in terms of their opposition to bond or arguments about particular bond factors.

Practitioners should arrive early for the bond hearing and follow the immigration court's check-in procedures. Practitioners should be aware that they may have to wait several hours before the case is called, given that many immigration courts schedule a morning or afternoon group of cases all for the same start time.

Practitioners should notify any witnesses or other family or community members who plan to attend the bond hearing in advance about where and when to show up, and about local court procedures, such as passing through security and forms of identification needed. It is important that only those with lawful immigration status come to immigration court.[306] Practitioners may also

---

[304] DHS Human Smuggling and Trafficking Center, Fact Sheet, Human Trafficking v. Human Smuggling (June 15, 2016), ctip.defense.gov/Portals/12/Documents/HSTC_Human%20Trafficking%20vs.%20Human%20Smuggling%20Fact%20Sheet.pdf?ver=2016-07-14-145555-320.

[305] EOIR policy memoranda are available on the EOIR website, at https://www.justice.gov/eoir/reference-materials/general/chapter-10 (updated Dec. 21, 2023).

[306] Even noncitizens present with some protection, such as deferred action, should be cautioned about the risks of presenting at a hearing or posting bond at an ICE office. See, e.g., Mark Curnutte, ICE Detains Young Kentucky Mother Who Has Legal Status, USA Today, Aug. 23, 2017, www.usatoday.com/story/news/nation-now/2017/08/23/ice-detains-young-ohio-mother-who-has-legal-status/59535500 want to provide attendees with guidance and specific examples of appropriate and inappropriate attire. If possible, and if the practitioner believes there is a good chance the IJ will grant bond, the person who will be paying the bond (the obligor) could come to court ready to pay the bond, so that they can pay the bond immediately if the IJ grants the requested bond amount.[307] If there are family or community members who attend the bond proceeding, the practitioner should point out their presence to the IJ at the beginning of the bond hearing. If the respondent is appearing by videoconference (through Webex), this should be done once the respondent appears on the screen, so that the respondent knows who is there and possibly gains confidence from seeing those present to support them.

Note on Webex:[308] Some IJs will provide practitioners with the choice between in-person or remote hearings, and others may require a Webex hearing. In some detention centers, practitioners may choose to appear with their client when appearing remotely, so that the practitioner and respondent may speak with each other during breaks, or pass notes during the hearing. But the practitioner's ability to join their client within the detention center varies between different detention centers, so practitioners should confirm with the detention center that this is an option. Practitioners will also need to schedule this visit in advance. Practitioners should tell family and others who plan to attend about the videoconference and that they might not have a chance to speak with the respondent. Practitioners should also prepare the client for the Webex appearance and explain that they may only have a limited view of the courtroom. Practitioners should also discuss who else will be in the room, and what to do if the respondent and practitioner need to confer.

A practitioner and their client may communicate over Webex with each other using the regular mute and unmute function. But it is important to note that there's no guarantee that a practitioner's communications with a client over Webex will remain private and confidential, as others may be in the virtual room at the same time. Practitioners should meet with the respondent before the hearing to discuss the details of the respondent's case. Similarly, if the IJ presents a recess for a practitioner to consult with their client, the practitioner should request that OPLA and any other individuals attending the hearing exit the Webex room altogether so as to ensure confidentiality.

1/ (noting that DACA holder was detained when she went to an ICE office to "post bond for another immigrant who was eligible for release"). It is possible, however, that witnesses without lawful immigration status may be willing to serve as a witness in a bond hearing occurring on Webex, as they would not be required to enter a physical courthouse to testify.

[307] For more information about paying the bond, see section V.C.1 infra.

[308] American Immigration Lawyers Association and CAIR Coalition, Representing Detained Clients in the Virtual Legal Landscape, 5–7 (Oct. 10, 2023), https://www.caircoalition.org/sites/default/files/documents/Representing_Detained_Clients_Report%20(3).pdf.

While there is generally no requirement that bond proceedings be recorded, IJs using Webex will typically create a digital audio recording (DAR) of the hearing. Practitioners may request a copy of the DAR by emailing a request to the specific administrative control court with a copy of the Form E-28 entry of appearance.[309]

According to the Immigration Court Practice Manual, during the bond hearing DHS "should state whether a bond has been set and, if a bond has been set, the amount of the bond and the DHS justification for that amount."[310] The Practice Manual directs that the respondent or the respondent's representative "should make an oral statement (an 'offer of proof' or 'proffer') addressing whether the [noncitizen's] release would pose a danger to property or persons, whether the [noncitizen] is likely to appear for future immigration proceedings, and whether the [noncitizen] poses a danger to national security."[311] The IJ may or may not allow witnesses to testify.[312] If the IJ does not allow a witness to testify, it is important that the practitioner make an offer of proof detailing what that witness would say if allowed to testify, in the event that the bond decision is appealed. The practitioner should prepare for the oral argument they will present as to why, under the governing legal framework, the client merits release on bond. The bond argument should generally be a maximum of a few minutes, after which the IJ may have specific questions. The practitioner should also be prepared to address any negative factors, such as prior convictions or pending criminal charges, and argue why the respondent nevertheless has established that they merit release.

During the bond hearing, DHS may introduce evidence or witnesses to support its position that the respondent should not be released on bond or that a high bond amount should be set. It is rare that DHS would present a witness at a bond hearing and in some cases may seek to prevent willing police officers from testifying;[313] however, harmful DHS evidence is common, particularly if the individual has any criminal history. In order for the practitioner to best respond to and mitigate this evidence, they should prepare by gathering information and records in advance of the hearing.[314] In addition to the mitigation strategies discussed above, practitioners should be prepared to object where warranted to the admission of DHS evidence on grounds that the evidence is not probative

---

[309] Id.
[310] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(6).
[311] Id.
[312] See id. ("At the Immigration Judge's discretion, witnesses may be placed under oath and testimony taken.").
[313] The authors know of one instance in Baltimore, Maryland during which the OPLA attorney informed the IJ that they had been in contact with the arresting police officer who had previously agreed to testify at the bond proceeding and that he would no longer be testifying. Practitioners who experience similar OPLA attorney obstruction should contact Michelle N. Méndez, co-author of the original 2018 version of this guide, at mmendez@nipnlg.org.
[314] See supra section V.A.2.

or reliable and its admission would be fundamentally unfair, and argue in the alternative that it should be afforded minimal weight.

The IJ will usually make an oral decision at the end of the bond hearing.[315] The decision may be "based on any information that is available to the Immigration Judge or that is presented by the parties."[316] The decision is not transcribed, but if a party appeals, the IJ should prepare a written memorandum based on their notes. Failure by the IJ to prepare a written decision will lead to the BIA's remanding the case to the IJ for a written decision, which will unnecessarily prolong the client's detention.

C. Post Bond Hearing Considerations

1. Paying the Bond

After a bond has been set by either DHS or the IJ, the individual may be released once the bond amount has been paid.[317] If a client is unable to gather bond money independently, practitioners may want to consider connecting the client with third-party resources such as bond funds. Private bond companies also exist in certain jurisdictions but often impose high interest rates and other costs that should always be carefully reviewed.[318]

When the bond money is ready, an "obligor" (the person paying the bond) will need to be identified. That individual must be at least 18 years old and have lawful immigration status.[319] The obligor also needs documentary proof of their lawful status and identity. As of April 2023, ICE

[315] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(7).

[316] Id. (referencing 8 CFR § 1003.19(d)).

[317] 8 CFR § 103.6. While this section is titled "Surety Bonds," it encompasses both bonds secured by cash and bonds issued by surety companies. Because this regulation was issued by the former INS, it includes bonds that are not currently issued by ICE, such as public charge bonds and maintenance of status bonds.

[318] See, e.g., U. S. Consumer Watchdog, States Sue Firm over Alleged Immigrant Services Scam, Reuters, Feb. 22, 2021, https://www.reuters.com/article/usa-cfpb-immigrants/update-1-u-s-consumer-watchdog-states-sue-firm-over-alleged-immigrant-services-scam-idUSL1N2KS1YJ.

[319] See Nunez, supra note 226. Because DHS will ask for information about the obligor's immigration status, see 74 Fed. Reg. 243 (Dec. 21, 2009), www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2009-12-21/html/E9-30265.htm, it is best for a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident to pay the bond. See supra note 306 (reporting instance in which DACA recipient was detained by ICE when she went to post bond for someone else). Attorneys and legal representatives should be wary of agreeing to be the obligor in a client's case. Representatives may be asked to do this when a client has no one willing or able to come forward as the obligor. It is important to carefully consult the applicable ethical rules to determine whether this course of action complies with rules of professional responsibility. In particular, practitioners should consider whether this scenario presents a conflict of interest given that the obligor has a financial interest in getting their bond money back, which will only happen if the client is deported or wins the case.

began using CeBONDS, a web-based system allowing for online posting of the bond payment.[320] This web-based automatic payment system is only presented in English and Spanish. Payment through the online system must be made either through Fedwire, an electronic funds transfer system operated by the Federal Reserve Bank, or as an ACH, a transfer of funds from one bank account to another.

Once these steps are completed, the detained individual should be released from ICE detention, although the precise amount of time between posting of the bond and the client's release will vary based on local practices. Even if DHS appeals the bond decision, the respondent can usually still pay the bond amount and be released; in some limited situations, however, the respondent may remain detained if DHS invokes a regulatory stay of the IJ's bond order in conjunction with a bond appeal.[321] If the individual is being detained in another state, ICE may require the obligor to provide proof that the individual has transportation from the detention facility to the place they will reside upon release.[322]

2. Result of Release on Bond

It is important to remind clients that achieving release on bond is not the same as resolving the underlying removal case. Getting released on bond has no legal effect on the underlying removal case, which will continue to proceed. Once a respondent is released from detention, their case may be moved from the immigration court's detained docket to a non-detained docket, which may slow the pace of proceedings and typically results in the assignment of a different IJ. DHS is supposed to "immediately advise" the immigration court of a respondent's release from custody,[323] but this may not always happen. Some IJs prefer that the respondent's representative file a motion to transfer the case from the detained docket to the non-detained docket. If the respondent desires to change the venue of the removal proceedings upon release, they must file a motion for a change of venue in the removal case, not the bond proceeding. If the practitioner only represents the client in the bond proceeding, it may be advisable for the client to file a pro se motion to change venue, although the practitioner should ensure that the client understands the process for filing and may wish to review the client's pro se filing. Practitioners should inquire about local immigration court practices and preferences.

It is important for practitioners to remind the client of their obligation to continue to appear in [320] ICE, Post a Bond Frequently Asked Questions, https://www.ice.gov/detain/detention-management/bonds; 88 Fed. Reg. 53349, 53360 (Aug. 8, 2023).

[321] See infra section VI.A.
[322] See Nunez, supra note 226.
[323] 8 CFR § 1003.19(g).

court, and that failing to appear will result in an in absentia order of removal. To ensure that the client is informed of any change in venue or hearing date, practitioners should file a change of address form, EOIR-33, with the immigration court within five days of the client being released (or after any other move), and serve a copy on OPLA. As with the bond redetermination packet above, these documents should all be e-filed through ECAS, if possible, in which case service on OPLA will be automatic.[324] Clients should be reminded that if they change address at any time, the immigration court must be informed within five days of the change; clients should notify their representative immediately of any address change. Additionally, practitioners and clients should regularly check the status of the immigration court case through EOIR's automated case information system to stay informed of any changes in the date or location of the next removal hearing.[325]

3. Getting Bond Money Back at the Conclusion of the Removal Case

After the respondent's removal proceedings have concluded, either from being ordered removed or granted relief, the immigration bond should be cancelled and ICE should send a notice to the obligor on ICE Form I-391, Notice of Immigration Bond Cancelled.[326] It may also be possible to receive a bond refund if the respondent has returned to the home country without completing removal proceedings, or if the respondent's case concludes through voluntary departure.[327] The "General Terms and Conditions" section of Form I-352 discusses what events shall lead to [324] See supra note 236.

---

[325] Individuals can call the immigration court's automated information phone line—1-800-898-7180—or visit https://acis.eoir.justice.gov/en/ to check on case status, inputting the respondent's A number. For audio instructions on checking immigration court case status in four Mayan Languages, including Mam, K'iche', Q'anjob'al, and Q'eqchi', see Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc., Audio Instructions for Checking Immigration Court Case Status in Mayan Languages (Mar. 4, 2021), https://cliniclegal.org/resources/removal-proceedings/audio-instructions-checking-immigration-court-case-status-mayan.

[326] 88 Fed. Reg. at 53360. Under current regulations, individuals can only post bond online through CeBONDS; all other notices, decisions, or documents from ICE cannot be served electronically. Id. 53360–61 (citing 8 CFR 103.8(a)(1) and (2)). For detailed information and tips on the bond refund process, see Michelle N. Méndez, CLINIC, Immigration Bond: How to Get Your Money Back (Feb. 26, 2016), available in English and Spanish at cliniclegal.org/resources/immigration-bond-how-get-your-money-back. Much of the information provided in this subsection was obtained from the Méndez article. See also Stanford Law School Immigrants' Rights Clinic, University of California, Davis School of Law Immigration Law Clinic, Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc., The Right to Reclaim Your Immigration Bond Money (Feb. 8, 2019), https://law.stanford.edu/wp-content/uploads/2019/02/19-02-08-Bond-FOIA-1-pager-final.pdf (one-pager on getting bond money back).

[327] See Méndez, supra note 326. (describing the process by which the obligor can seek rescission of the bond breach, reinstatement of the bond, and bond cancellation by proving that the respondent has departed).

cancellation of the bond.[328] However, there is variation in policy by some offices and officers, so the obligor could reach out to their local office and seek return of the bond money.

In practice, bond obligors may wish to contact ICE affirmatively to initiate the bond cancellation process. Once the obligor receives ICE Form I-391, they can send it along with a copy of the bond receipt and a letter requesting the refund to:

> Debt Management Center
> Attention: Bond Unit
> P.O. Box 5000
> Williston, VT 05495-5000
> Telephone: (802) 288-7600
> Fax: (802) 288-1226

If the respondent fails to appear for removal proceedings or immigration appointments with ICE, the individual may be deemed a fugitive and in breach of the bond terms. In this scenario, ICE will send the obligor ICE Form I-340, Notice to Obligor to Deliver Alien, which demands that the obligor present the respondent at the ICE field office at a specific date and time. If the obligor does not comply with Form I-340's demands, ICE will send ICE Form I-323, Notice of Immigration Bond Breached. In that case, the obligor will not receive a bond refund.

4. Voluntary Departure in Detention

A respondent may be granted voluntary departure without being released from detention.[329] This process is sometimes referred to as voluntary departure "under safeguards."[330] If the respondent receives voluntary departure under safeguards, they may have to post the amount of the plane

---

[328] Form I-340 is available at https://www.ice.gov/doclib/forms/i352.pdf. Note that the Bond Management Handbook discusses events that automatically cancel the bond and when in the exercise of discretion ICE may cancel the bond. ERO Bond Management Handbook, ERO 11301.1 (Aug. 19, 2014), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/foia/dro_policy_memos/eroBondManagementHandbook2018-ICFO-31476.pdf.

[329] See Matter of M-A-S-, 24 I&N 762 (BIA 2009); s*ee also* Edwin Nunez Bencosme, A206 223 455 (BIA Oct. 4, 2016) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/328156619/Edwin-Nunez-Bencosme-A206-223-455-BIA-Oct-4-2016?utm_source=aila.org&utm_medium=InfoNet%20Search ("[A] respondent's desire to file an appeal in separate bond proceedings is not an appropriate factor on which to deny voluntary departure in the exercise of discretion.").

[330] See M-A-S-, 24 I&N at 765.

ticket with ICE by a certain date. The respondent should not be required to pay a separate bond if not being released from detention.[331]

5. Bond Revocation

The INA provides for the revocation of bond and re-arrest and detention of an individual "at any time."[332] DHS can also raise a bond amount if there has been a change in circumstances since the IJ set the bond.[333] If DHS revokes bond and re-detains an individual, that person can seek redetermination of DHS's new custody decision with the IJ and, if necessary, appeal the IJ's decision to the BIA.

6. Second or Successive Requests for Bond Redetermination

The regulations provide that once a respondent has had an initial bond hearing, they may only be considered for a subsequent bond redetermination if their "circumstances have changed materially since the prior bond redetermination."[334] The request for a subsequent bond redetermination should be made in writing.[335] A detained respondent can request a subsequent bond redetermination with the IJ even while the initial bond decision is on appeal to the BIA.[336] The following factors have been found in unpublished BIA decisions to be material changes in circumstances that justified a subsequent bond redetermination request:

- The respondent has been granted relief from removal[337]

---

[331] See id. at 767 (noting that "where continued detention is ordered, it makes no sense to require a bond, because the purpose of the bond—to assure that the respondent will appear for departure—is already fully served by the continued detention"); Andres Fuentes Sanchez, A216 554 089 (BIA June 20, 2019) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/419388863/Andres-Fuentes-Sanchez-A216-554-089-BIA-June-20-2019?secret_password=0DMSsT6tZHqwxy9GQopk (concluding that it is inappropriate to require voluntary departure bond for respondent granted voluntary departure without release from detention).

[332] INA § 236(b); 8 CFR § 236.1(c)(9).

[333] Matter of Sugay, 17 I&N Dec. 637 (BIA 1981).

[334] See 8 CFR § 1003.19(e).

[335] Id. § 1003.19(e).

[336] Matter of Valles, 21 I&N Dec. 769 (BIA 1997) (holding that an IJ has continuing jurisdiction to consider a bond redetermination request while the previous bond redetermination is on appeal with the BIA); P-E-A-U-, AXXX XXX 043 (BIA Nov. 23, 2020) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/488781959/P-E-A-U-AXXX-XXX-043-BIA-Nov-23-2020?secret_password=nn84v9xErMxxURn5wzG0 (same).

[337] W-S-, AXXX XXX 991 (BIA Sept. 28, 2017) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/362583564/W-S-AXXX-XXX-991-BIA-Sept-28-2017.

- The respondent submitted evidence that two of his pending criminal charges were dismissed, that he had made efforts at rehabilitation, and that his adjustment of status application was likely to be granted[338]
- Another detained individual in a virtually identical position as the respondent was released on bond and DHS did not appeal that decision[339]
- Intervening decision found respondent mentally incompetent,[340] and
- Changes in asylum law along with COVID-19 in the detention center.[341]

Practitioners have reported that IJs have considered the following changed circumstances: the fact that the respondent retained an attorney; a situation where pending charges were dropped and defense counsel provided a letter stating that the arrest was a case of mistaken identity; the filing of an application for immigration relief with USCIS, the issuance of an order in family court establishing eligibility for Special Immigrant Juvenile Status, obtaining a signed law enforcement certification for U nonimmigrant status, or other steps toward immigration relief; and family's proven inability to pay the bond set.

[338] B-G-L-, AXXX XXX 714 (BIA Nov. 8, 2019) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/437079068/B-G-L-AXXX-XXX-714-BIA-Nov-8-2019?secret_password=KUvdErk72vmydTszlral.

[339] Wajid Ali Siddiqi, A095 473 104 (BIA Apr. 26, 2011) (unpublished), www.scribd.com/document/198852089/Wajid-Ali-Siddiqi-A095-473-104-BIA-April-26-2011. This highlights the benefit of frequent communication and sharing of recent outcomes with colleagues.

[340] E-U-L-V-, AXXX XXX 333 (BIA June 9, 2022) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/615745419/E-U-L-V-AXXX-XXX-333-BIA-June-9-2022?secret_password=nnnzPFjvSOfxXlUAN4dM.

[341] Appeal ID 5327126 (BIA Aug. 16, 2022) (unpublished), https://www.scribd.com/document/684009681/Appeal-ID-5327126-BIA-Aug-16-2022?secret_password=qjdMHF6KQBJ2hjtBjeQA.

VI. Bond Appeals

A. Legal Overview of Bond Appeals

1. Bond Appeals Generally

Either party can appeal an IJ's bond decision to the BIA.[342] While an IJ's custody decision is on appeal with the BIA, the IJ still has jurisdiction to reconsider the bond decision.[343] The Notice of Appeal must be filed with the BIA within 30 calendar days of the IJ decision.[344] Unlike an appeal of a merits decision in removal proceedings, in bond proceedings a respondent cannot appeal the BIA decision to the federal appeals court via a petition for review.[345] However, federal district courts do have jurisdiction to consider habeas actions challenging the legality of an individual's detention in immigration custody.[346]

As with other types of appeals, in a bond appeal the BIA will not consider new evidence that was not submitted to the IJ.[347] The BIA applies a "clearly erroneous" standard of review to all factual findings made by an IJ.[348] The BIA reviews all questions of law, discretion, and judgment and all other issues on appeal de novo.[349] In general, practitioners may have more success with arguments about legal errors rather than arguing that the IJ should have weighed the evidence differently. Examples of legal error would include the IJ applying the wrong standard, misrepresenting the record, failing to conduct an individualized hearing, taking a prosecutorial role, and failing to consider positive Guerra factors.

---

[342] 8 CFR §§ 1003.19(f), 236.1(d)(3)(i). BIA Practice Manual lists some exceptions where the BIA does not have authority to review a bond decision, including if the respondent is denied relief by the IJ and does not appeal, is granted relief by the IJ and DHS does not appeal, is granted or denied relief by the BIA, or is released from detention on the conditions requested in the bond appeal. BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 7.2(c).

[343] Matter of Valles, 21 I&N Dec. 769 (BIA 1997).

[344] 8 CFR § 1003.38(b). In contrast, in situations where the respondent is appealing DHS's decision regarding a request for amelioration of conditions made outside the seven-day period after release necessary for IJ review under 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(2), the respondent has ten days to file an appeal of DHS's decision with the BIA. 8 CFR § 236.1(d)(3)(ii); BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 7.3(a)(2)(B), ("In the limited instances in which the Board has jurisdiction over the appeal from a DHS bond decision, the deadline for filing an appeal is ten days from the date of the DHS bond decision.").

[345] INA § 236(e) (stating that "[t]he Attorney General's discretionary judgment regarding the application of this section shall not be subject to review" and that "[n]o court may set aside any action or decision by the Attorney General under this section regarding the detention or release of any [noncitizen] or the grant, revocation, or denial of bond or parole").

[346] See supra section III; Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 516–17 (2003); Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 686–88 (2001).

[347] BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 4.8.

[348] See 8 CFR § 1003.1(d)(3)(i); Matter of R-S-H-, 23 I&N Dec. 629, 637 (BIA 2003).

[349] 8 CFR § 1003.1(d)(3)(ii).

2. Stays of an IJ's Bond Decision While a BIA Appeal Is Pending

The regulations allow DHS to seek a stay of the IJ's custody determination pending a BIA appeal. A stay prevents the individual from being released pursuant to the IJ's bond decision during the pendency of the BIA appeal of the IJ bond decision. If DHS does not seek a stay, the filing of a bond appeal "shall not operate to delay compliance with the [IJ's bond] order . . . nor stay the administrative proceedings or removal."[350] The regulations contemplate an automatic stay in some circumstances, as described in the paragraphs that follow, and allow for a discretionary stay upon a DHS motion in connection with a DHS appeal of a bond decision.[351]

The automatic stay provision is triggered "[i]n any case in which DHS has determined that [a noncitizen] should not be released or has set a bond of $10,000 or more."[352] In automatic stay cases, the IJ custody order "shall be stayed upon DHS's filing of a notice of intent to appeal the custody redetermination (Form EOIR-43) with the immigration court within one business day of the order."[353] DHS has discretion to file or not file Form EOIR-43. Accordingly, even though this type of stay is labeled "automatic," the bond decision will not be stayed if DHS does not trigger a stay by filing Form EOIR-43 within one day of the IJ's decision.[354] An automatic stay lapses in the following situations:

- If DHS does not file a notice of appeal with the BIA within 10 business days of the IJ custody order.[355] To preserve the automatic stay, DHS must identify the appeal as an automatic stay case, and file with the notice of appeal a certification by a "senior legal official" that the official has approved the appeal filing and "is satisfied that the contentions justifying the continued detention of [noncitizen] have evidentiary support, and the legal arguments are warranted by existing law or by a non-frivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing precedent or the establishment of new precedent."[356]
- If the BIA has not issued a decision within 90 days after the filing of the notice of appeal. The 90-day period is tolled if the respondent receives a requested briefing extension, for [350] Id. § 236.1(d)(4).

[351] Id. § 1003.19(i)(1).

[352] Id. § 1003.19(i)(2).

[353] Id.

[354] See id. ("The decision whether or not to file Form EOIR-43 is subject to the discretion of the Secretary.").

[355] Id. § 1003.6(c)(1).

[356] Id. § 1003.6(c)(1)(i)–(ii). The regulations also provide that the IJ must prepare a written decision within five business days after the IJ is advised that DHS has filed a notice of appeal in such cases. See id. § 1003.6(c)(2) (noting that in "exigent circumstances" and with the approval of the BIA a five-day extension may be permitted, and that the court "shall prepare and submit the record of proceedings without delay").

the same number of days as the briefing extension is granted.[357] DHS can prevent a stay from automatically lapsing by filing a motion for a discretionary stay before the expiration of the automatic stay period.[358] If the BIA fails to issue a decision on DHS's motion before the 90-day period ends, the stay remains in effect for up to 30 additional days while the BIA decides DHS's discretionary stay motion.[359]

If the BIA issues a decision authorizing release, denies DHS's motion for a discretionary stay, or does not act on a discretionary stay motion during the automatic stay period, the respondent's release is automatically stayed for another five business days.[360] During those five business days, DHS may refer the custody case to the Attorney General. If it does so, the individual's release is "stayed pending the Attorney General's consideration of the case," but the automatic stay expires 15 business days after the case is referred to the Attorney General.

Several federal district courts have held that a previous version of the automatic stay regulation violated the respondent's due process rights.[361]

B. Nuts and Bolts of the Bond Appeal Process

1. Initial Considerations Prior to Filing the Appeal

As is true for any appeal from an immigration court ruling, it is crucial that practitioners build a strong record before the IJ in order to maximize the chances of success. A strong record may include substantial documentation establishing lack of dangerousness, absence of flight risk, and the respondent's community ties and other equities. Given that bond proceedings may not be recorded and no transcript will be created for the appeal, it is also important that the practitioner (or a colleague) take careful notes of the discussion that occurs during the bond hearing, including the substance of any testimony, attorney and IJ discussion during the hearing, and the IJ's oral decision. At the conclusion of the bond hearing, if there is any chance that the respondent may wish to appeal, the practitioner should reserve appeal.

---

[357] Id. § 1003.6(c)(4).

[358] Id. § 1003.6(c)(5) ("DHS may seek a discretionary stay pursuant to 8 CFR § 1003.19(i)(1) to stay the immigration judge's order in the event the Board does not issue a decision on the custody appeal within the period of the automatic stay.").

[359] Id.

[360] Id. § 1003.6(d).

[361] See, e.g., Zabadi v. Chertoff, No. C 05-01796, 2005 WL 1514122 (N.D. Cal. June 17, 2005) (unpublished) (concluding also that the regulation was ultra vires); Zavala v. Ridge, 310 F. Supp. 2d 1071 (N.D. Cal. 2004); Ashley v. Ridge, 288 F. Supp. 2d 662 (D.N.J. 2003). But see, e.g., Pisciotta v. Ashcroft, 311 F. Supp. 2d 445 (D.N.J. 2004). These decisions predated the current regulation found at 8 CFR § 1003.6(c) which contains the 90-day automatic lapse provision.

2. Filing the Bond Appeal

The BIA Practice Manual is a must-read source of information and instructions on how to prepare an appeal. Particularly relevant portions include Chapter 3 (Filing with the Board), Chapter 4 (Appeals of IJ Decisions), Chapter 7 (Bond), and the appendices that provide sample documents.[362]

The BIA appeal, filed on Form EOIR-26, Notice of Appeal,[363] must be received at the BIA within 30 calendar days of the IJ's decision.[364] There is no filing fee for bond appeals.[365] Practitioners should not mix the bond appeal with the appeal of any other matter, such as the merits decision. Instead, the bond appeal should be filed on a separate Form EOIR-26.[366] A complete bond appeal filing packet includes a cover page, Form EOIR-26, Form EOIR-27 (Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Board of Immigration Appeals) if the respondent is represented on the appeal,[367] and any supporting documentation. All forms should be completed in full, including proper signatures and proof of service. The packet should be two-hole punched at the top.[368]

In completing Form EOIR-26, practitioners should carefully read and follow the form's instructions, which are available on the EOIR website.[369] In particular, Question 6 directs that the appealing party "[s]tate in detail the reason(s) for this appeal." In the response box, or in an attachment filed with the form, the practitioner should lay out specific and detailed bases for the appeal and identify the

---

[362] BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78.

[363] In contrast, Form EOIR-29 is used to appeal a DHS decision. Id. Ch. 7.3(a)(1).

[364] Id. Ch. 3.1(a)(1) ("For appeals and motions that must be filed with the Board, the appeal or motion is not deemed 'filed' until it is received at the Board." (emphasis in original)); supra section VI.A (discussing appeal deadline).

[365] BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 7.3(a)(3). There is, however, a filing fee for appeals of voluntary departure bond decisions, which are outside the scope of this guide.

[366] Id. Ch. 4.4(b)(5)(A) (directing that "[e]ach Immigration Judge decision must be appealed separately"); id. Ch. 7.3(a)(1) (noting that bond appeal "must not be combined with an appeal of a decision regarding the [noncitizen's] removal or deportation" (emphasis in original)).

[367] The representative must complete Form EOIR-27 even if they were the respondent's representative below and there is a Form EOIR-28 on file with the immigration court. See id. Ch. 2.1(b)(1). Form EOIR-27 can be found on the EOIR website at www.justice.gov/eoir/list-downloadable-eoir-forms. For unrepresented respondents, the Florence Project's website contains a number of useful pro se resources and guides, available at firrp.org/resources/prose/ (last updated May 2013). See, e.g., Florence Project, Appealing Your Case to the Board of Immigration Appeals (May 2013), firrp.org/media/BIA-Appeal-Guide-2013_new-BIA-address-2013.pdf.

[368] BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78 Ch. 3.3(c)(8).

[369] The Form EOIR-26 is available for download on the EOIR website, www.justice.gov/eoir/file/eoir26/download.

error(s) made by the IJ.[370] Specific reasons should be given even if the practitioner plans to file a brief.[371] Question 8 asks if the appealing party "intend[s] to file a separate written brief or statement after filing" the EOIR-26. Practitioners should only check "yes" if they indeed plan to file a brief. If an appealing party checks "yes" and then does not submit a brief without notifying the BIA, this is grounds for summary dismissal of the appeal.[372] Note that a well-written brief is a persuasive advocacy tool and a good idea for any appeal to the BIA. In general, practitioners should take care to follow all instructions, including deadlines, signatures, proof of service, and careful completion of the forms, in order to avoid rejection by the BIA.[373] The completed appeal packet must be filed electronically in ECAS-eligible cases. In cases not eligible for electronic filing, the appeal packet should be mailed to the BIA at the following address:

Board of Immigration Appeals
Clerk's Office
5107 Leesburg Pike, Suite 2000
Falls Church, VA 22041

When filing the appeal by mail, practitioners should send the appeals packet with ample time before the deadline to avoid unforeseen delays caused by weather or mail mishaps, and use a form of mail that includes a delivery confirmation. Practitioners must serve a copy of the filing on the OPLA office that represented DHS during the bond hearing.[374]

3. Appeal Brief, Processing, and Decision

Within several weeks after the appeal has been filed, the BIA will typically issue a filing receipt.[375] The BIA will also mail the parties the IJ's memorandum of bond decision, which is written by the IJ

---

[370] See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 4.16(b) (failure to specify the grounds for an appeal is grounds for summary dismissal of the appeal).

[371] One practitioner noted that on bond appeals where the practitioner indicates that they will file a brief, it is sufficient to write a short summary such as: "The IJ erred in denying bond because the totality of the evidence demonstrated that Respondent was not a danger to the community or a risk of flight. The IJ misapplied the factors in Matter of Guerra and disregarded evidence of equities and rehabilitation."

[372] See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 4.16(b), (d) (noting grounds for summary dismissal); see also id. Ch. 4.7(e) (specifying process for filing a "briefing waiver" with the BIA prior to the brief deadline to inform the BIA if the appealing party decides not to file a brief).

[373] See id. Ch. 3.1(c).

[374] See id. Ch. 3.2 (discussing service requirements for BIA filings).

[375] See id. Ch. 3.1(d)(1) ("If a filing receipt is not received within approximately two weeks, parties may call the Automated Case Information Hotline for current information on appeals or the Clerk's Office for current information on appeals or motions.").

once an appeal notice has been filed.[376] Unlike merits appeals, in bond appeal cases the BIA will likely not issue a transcript.[377] Even though the practitioner will not have the benefit of a transcript, if the IJ recorded the bond proceeding, the practitioner can request the audio recording with the local immigration court.[378]

If the practitioner indicated on the Form EOIR-26 that they planned to file a brief, the BIA will mail a briefing schedule. In detained cases, the parties are typically given 21 calendar days from the date of the briefing schedule notice to simultaneously brief the appeal.[379] On request, the BIA may grant one briefing extension in detained cases, of 21 additional days.[380] Practitioners will need to carefully consider and discuss with the client how a bond appeal timeline will map onto the timeline of the detained merits case. While the bond appeal progresses, the detained client will often be pushed to move ahead with the merits hearing on any immigration relief. It may be difficult to get a decision in the bond appeal before the individual hearing. If the goal is to obtain a bond appeal decision before the merits hearing, practitioners could consider strategies such as preparing a draft bond appeal brief before the written IJ bond decision is received, foregoing a briefing extension, and/or writing a shorter bond appeal brief in order to save time.

A complete brief filing packet will include:

- BIA briefing notice (stapled on top of the cover page)
- Cover page
- Brief, which should be signed by the preparer with their EOIR ID number and include the respondent's "A" number on the cover page and on the bottom right corner of each subsequent page, and
- Proof of service.

For detailed instructions about the format and contents of BIA briefs, practitioners should consult the BIA Practice Manual, particularly Chapter 4.6. If submitting the brief by mail rather than online, the practitioner should be sure to mail the brief sufficiently in advance of the deadline to ensure it

---

[376] Immigration Court Practice Manual, supra note 1, Ch. 9.3(e)(7).

[377] See BIA Practice Manual, supra note 78, Ch. 4.2(f)(2) (noting that "[t]ranscripts are not normally prepared" in bond determination appeals).

[378] Id. (directing that the practitioner "[c]ontact the Clerk's Office or the local Immigration Court to make arrangements to listen to the digitally recorded hearings"); see also id. Ch. 4.6(d)(7) (providing the citation format for the audio recording where a transcript is not prepared).

[379] Id. Ch. 4.7(a)(2).

[380] Id. Ch. 4.7(c)(1)(B). Unless and until a briefing extension request is granted, the original deadline applies and practitioners should file any extension request well in advance of the briefing deadline. See id. Ch. 3.1(b)(6) ("A pending extension request does not excuse a party from meeting a filing deadline.").

arrives on time. While the BIA will not issue a briefing receipt, practitioners can keep track of BIA appeals by calling the BIA Clerk's Office.[381]

The BIA will serve a copy of its decision on the parties by regular mail or through ECAS in eligible cases.[382] In a situation where DHS appeals a favorable IJ bond decision, practitioners should apply the appropriate standard of review and vigorously defend the IJ's decision in briefing to the BIA.

VII. Conclusion

It is important that representatives understand the legal framework governing bond proceedings in order to harness that knowledge toward zealous and well-prepared advocacy on behalf of detained respondents. Successful bond representation can make all the difference in whether an individual is able to secure release and ultimately prevail on the merits of their case. Effective representation in bond proceedings also helps to safeguard the due process rights of detained individuals. The authors encourage practitioners to consider pro bono opportunities available in their jurisdiction or remotely, which not only help meet a compelling need but can also provide practitioners with experience and mentoring. Given the ever-changing landscape of immigration detention, practitioners are encouraged to remain connected to others doing bond work in order to share information about the latest trends, successful strategies, and best practices. Finally, the authors wish to remind readers that this guide is intended for general educational use only and that practitioners should independently research the law governing their jurisdiction, as this area of law (like many in the immigration field) is complex and frequently changing.

---

[381] Id. Ch. 1.6(b) (providing automated hotline information for certain inquiries). Case information may also be tracked via the EOIR portal at https://portal.eoir.justice.gov/.

[382] Id. Ch. 7.3(b)(3).